AMIGA POWER

EIN MAGAZIN MIT STELLUNG

Achtung!

YOURS WITH ISSUE 47 OF AMIGA POWER

GUARDIAN

Be humbled as the Game of Champions leaps the void from CD32 to A1200 - and rejoice!

DERRING-DO

Weep copious tears of nostalgia as Mr Do makes a welcome return to AP. And this time it's from Yorkshire!

50 SUBSCRIPTIONS

In bringing pristine, fragrant-scented copies of AMIGA POWER to your door each month, we surpass even Interflora in our global delivery capabilities.

54 TIPS

A complete collection of Haynes manuals, the entire contents of the Reader's Digest How To Do Everything book, and the Japanese instructions for Cam's missing gun would be struggling to compete with the level of advice in our playing tips pages.

68 BACK ISSUES

Were you to trawl the British Museum for months, examining its exhibits and records in the minutest detail, you would find less historical information than there is in just one sensibly-priced back issue of AMIGA POWER.

78 LETTERS

AMIGA POWER receives more letters from you each day than the Royal Mail delivers across the whole country in an entire year.

INTRODUCING DISK 47

Let the trumpets sound! Let the eternal flame be lit! Let the dancing troupes perform! The Game of Champions has arrived on AMIGA POWER's coverdisks! Hear the crowd roar appreciatively as you take to the podium to attempt our special level, which brings together many of the baddies from later levels into one frenzied burst of gaming ecstasy.

One of the sweetest, most inventive, and simply best platform games on the Amiga 1200 is now obtainable on the 500, and it's even better than before, for some reason. Play our demo and see that it is good.

Mr Do returns again, this time looking his best yet in this fantastic Blitz Basic-programmed version from Yorkshire. Eat fruit and be merry.

It's Pacman - but on the Amiga - but on our coverdisk, in compact demo form. Devour dots in claustrophobic mazes, all the while pursued by crazed ghosts.

GOT A FAULTY DISK?

● Oh no! Are you sure? Before you go any further, try the procedures described in the panel over the page. If, after all that, you do have disk problems, chuck it in an envelope along with an explanatory letter and an SAE (or you'll never hear from them again), and return it NOT TO THE AP OFFICE but to: AMIGA POWER Disk Returns 47, Discopy Labs, PO Box 21, Daventry NN11 5BU. If you send it to us, the past will be altered to eradicate your parents and, therefore, YOU.

AMIGA POWER MARCH 1995

YOUR DISK AND YOU

READ THIS BIT FIRST OR NO-ONE WILL TAKE ANY NOTICE OF YOU WHEN YOU SAY THAT YOUR DISK DOESN'T WORK.

● You've only got 512K of memory on your Amiga? Blimey, that's a bit stupid, isn't it? Go and buy an expansion RIGHT NOW.

● To load any of the games, all you have to do is switch off your machine, insert the disk, and switch your machine back on again.

● An options menu will appear. Simply follow the instructions to load the game of your choice.

● Just to be on the safe side, though, the on-screen instructions say that you should press the appropriate function key to make your selection.

● You'll have to reset your machine in order to play one of the other demos. When you do so, simply follow the instructions above.

● Remember to keep the disk you are playing your game from in the drive at all times. And remember – switching the machine off for 20 seconds or so before loading a new program will help prevent disks being infected by stray viruses.

● Have a good time.

OH NO! SOMETHING WENT WRONG!

● Are you sure?

● Try all that stuff again, making sure you've disconnected any peripherals the program might not 'like', such as external drives.

● If your disk fails to load, then pop it in a padded envelope, along with a letter explaining the problem and an SAE, to:

AMIGA POWER Disk 47 Returns
Discopy Labs
PO Box 21
Daventry
NN11 5BU

● We're really hoping that you're reading this bit, because it's quite important: please don't send your disks to us at the AMIGA POWER office. We really don't know how to fix dodgy disks, and we'll just throw 'em straight in the bin. So send them to Discopy. Please.

Guardian (the Game of Champions) used to be available only on the CD32.

Guardian (the Game of Champions) was awarded a richly-deserved 90% in AP43. Guardian (the Game of Champions) was played incessantly by all members of AMIGA POWER for three whole weeks, resulting in the magazine missing its allocated print slot and being fined in excess of almost 15 thousand pounds. In New Zealand, where Guardian (the Game of Champions) emanates from, it has become the centre of a growing religious cult that has shocked the law enforcement community as well as civic leaders. It's that good.

Being the technophobes we are, we thought that the tilting skyline in Guardian (the Game of Champions) probably used some "special" chips in the CD32 and that it was therefore unlikely that we'd ever see an A1200 version. But no, it turns out that in the field of micro-electronics, we know nothing, as this demo clearly proves.

The game's a 3D version of Defender, with landers, pods, swarms and all those old favourites, only in 3D. The specially-made level in our demo contains many of the baddies from later levels, and rather than protecting humanoids, you've got to try and keep all the ground installations standing. If you can finish the level with 100% of the buildings intact, then you're pretty dashed good.

The controls are a bit odd, with the options being either a CD32 controller or the mouse. The mouse buttons accelerate or decelerate you, but use them sparingly, or it all gets horribly fast. To change the view, press ESC to get to the options menu. The keyboard commands go a little like this:

RETURN – Fire
SPACE BAR – Nuke (handy for the start of the level)
Left ALT key – Reverse direction (Great for taking out suckers on your tail)
Tab – Guided missiles (If you've got them, natch)

The funny spiked balls that appear when you shoot certain things are power-ups, and the trick to picking them up is to swoop low and grab them before they crash onto the ground and disappear. Play the demo, read the review on page 47 and then just go and buy the game any way. You owe it to yourself.

Lives

It's old, but it's good.
Like Steve.

Author: Nick Slaven

It's a superior version of Mr Do, a video game older than the most elderly giant tortoise that lives in the far off Galapagos Islands. As old as the mountain streams that carve through the Caledonian mountains, as old as the kilometre thick iceflows that press down on the bedrock of Iceland with unimaginable pressure. Older in fact, than many of the seven or so jokes we use, month after month, in

AMIGA POWER.

You know the score: Run around, pick up fruit, drop apples on baddies, fire your bouncy ball and flit through the levels. Just play it.

PUCMAN

Augenblick

Almost (but not quite) succeeding as a clone, Pucman nevertheless remains a spectacularly close conversion of the most popular coin-op of all time and the first to attract women in numbers to video games. Yes, not only are you bound to recognise the maze and the simple graphics, but the faithfully-reproduced sound is guaranteed to bring to mind treacherous visions of unpleasantly cavernous halls and sickle-cell anaemia. Where Pucman diverges from the one true path is in the movement of its monsters. The mighty beings of AMIGA POWER, having invested severally in How to Win at Pacman books, can state with authority that the ghosts of Pucman do not follow the correct patterns. Damn their omniscipitous eyes.

Tediously uncovered solutions aside, this version offers even more options than the original, including a fiendishly fun simultaneous two-player mode, where you (the player) must decide whether to help or hinder him/her (the other player) in his/her quest for maximum pointage. Pucman offers hours of frivolity of a flee/chase nature and, as a financially taunting bonus, the full version (available from the address displayed proudly in the demo itself) won't start going dark in the increasingly more obvious and distracting way that this one does. Enjoy.

BUBBLE & SQUEAK

Still the best of friends.

Vivienne Westwood helped design the hats.

Authors: Audiogenic

Boy were you lot annoyed when we originally had a Bubble and Squeak disk demo back in AP42. It was an A1200 demo, you see (one of our first), and everyone (well, everyone who didn't have an A1200) seemed to think this was most unfair. However, with this demo, the only people who can complain are those who fail to appreciate the tricky yet pleasing nature of this finer than fine puzzly game. And they're stupid, so they don't count.

The bald kid and Blue Thing are back in four levels completely different from the A1200 demo, which is surely a Good Thing. The plan is to control the bald kid and coax Blue Thing to the exit, which is accomplished using the following "special" skills:

- To fire stars, press FIRE. Obviously.
- To pick up or drop pots, springs, etc, press DOWN and FIRE.
- These are all very well and good, but if you get to Blue Thing (which, on the first level, is accomplished by putting one of the springs on top of the other) then you can try out a fascinating array of new moves, many of which involve obvious cruelty to the azure mammal.
- To make it follow the bald kid, press DOWN and FIRE. Do the same when you're fed up of it trailing round.

- To kick it, stand right next to it and press FIRE. Sometimes you've got to.
- To get it to throw the bald kid into the air, stand in front of it and press UP and FIRE. Doing this while standing under an overhang means the bald kid cracks his head most amusingly.
- To get Blue Thing to flap its flippers, get coins by shooting nasties and then feed them into the bubble gum machine.
- And do all of these quickly, or both Blue Thing and the small bald child will drown. Horribly.

Tennis.
On the Amiga.
With bells on.

Nobody likes a favourite. Favourite pupils might get special attention from teacher, but the rest of the class scorn them and steal their dinner money. And favourite sons and daughters have cosseted upbringings, but pay for it later in life when they find themselves ill-equipped to cope in an unforgiving world. So Acid Software, who currently seem to be AMIGA POWER's favourite games publisher, had better watch it.

They've only got that way by consistently turning out fantastically good games, of course. Games like Skidmarks, Guardian, Roadkill and, we suspect, the sadly-delayed Skidmarks 2. Were they ever to let their standards slip for even a moment, they would suffer with the rest of them. For the time being, however, we seize upon each new game they send us with relish.

Center Court arrived entirely out of the blue, and even in its current unfinished state is the best tennis game any of us have ever played. And it seems to have been as much of a surprise to Acid as it was to us. It's actually been written by a mysterious German programmer called G Fritsche, about whom we know nothing, and it's been done using Blitz Basic, the language Acid used to write Guardian. Further delving reveals that it was originally an entry in a Blitz Basic competition run by our neighbours on Amiga Format. Acid are planning to tweak the game a bit and then release it very soon as part of a compilation ("Possibly with some other great multi-player games including a very good Bomberman [DynaBlaster] clone and a cool Gravity Wars thing," reveals Acid's Simon

We don't know about you, but we could do without all this.

"We'd probably burst if we waited"

RT

Armstrong, excitingly). But we'd probably burst if we waited until Acid's plans have been finalised before telling you about it, so here goes.

There's only so much you can do with a tennis game, and Center Court doesn't have anything particularly unique about it. There's a tournament mode, which is handy, along with a variety of surfaces to play on, both singles and doubles matches, and a career mode in which you get experience points as you win matches which can be assigned to various aspects of your game. Acid are hoping to incorporate a four-player doubles mode before they release it, but apart from that there's nothing in Center Court that hasn't been seen in a dozen other tennis games.

But it just 'feels right', somehow. The ball zips about at a tremendous pace, and a carefully-placed serve will need lightning reactions to return – just like real tennis. Serves are achieved by first pressing fire, and then holding down the joystick for a bit, which allows you to place the ball just about anywhere you like. And once the ball's moving about you've got a full range of shots at your disposal. Meanwhile, the crowd applauds and goes "Ooh" a lot.

Tsk. You're not convinced, are you? Just take it from AP: Center Court looks like it'll be fun, in much the same way as Super Tennis on the SNES transcended its tennis-ness to become one of the best games of any type on the machine. If Acid just take out the unnecessary digitised photographs, tidy up the presentation a bit and perhaps incorporate a 'clack' sample for when the ball skims off the top of the net, it may well turn out to be the Amiga's best tennis game yet.

● JONATHAN DAVIES

If they do manage a four-player option AMIGA POWER will be several days late on sale. Sorry.

TRACKSUIT MANAGER 2

AMIGA POWER PREVIEW

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: Alternative

Author: In house

ETA: March

Did you know that every disposable nappy ever used lies intact in a land-fill site somewhere, a dormant biological disaster just waiting to explode? I mention this because it struck me that there will soon be a similar overloading of the world's fragile eco-structure by redundant footy munny games, whose numbers seem to be spiralling dangerously out of control.

With this thought in mind, I challenged Alternative's Roger Hulley to explain himself. Why should we be looking forward to this game? What separates it from the herd?

"Er, well..." he replied. "Have you ever played Tracksuit Manager?"

Indeed I have. The idea behind it was that the world (and his annoying younger brother, natch) was crying out to play a football management game without all the tedious financial aspects, concentrating solely on the tactics. It was also the game that pioneered in-game running commentary, with a text description in the style of a football commentary letting you know what was happening on the pitch in plenty of detail. And it was rather good. If not quite brilliant.

"Well, it's like that only better," claimed Rog. "It'll be really fast – no having to make cups of tea while the results come in, for example, unlike another WELL KNOWN FOOTY GAME that we won't mention.

"Also, it'll have a pretty advanced and revamped tactical engine, with the player choosing formations and playing styles as well as player positions and roles – you know, nominating penalty takers and the like. Also, if you play somebody out of position you'll really notice it. Unlike, for example, another WELL KNOWN FOOTY GAME that we won't mention.

"And, of course, it'll have all the English league clubs and some of the conference teams. And we'll be making extra sure that all the data will be fully up-to-date on the day of release."

Will Bath City be in it then?

"Who?"

Oh. I see...

Tracksuit Manager 2 will be in for review next month, allegedly, and you can be sure that we will dissect it carefully before either elevating it to the giddy heights of world-wide success or relegating it to the toxic dump of life.

Frankly this looks like ANOTHER WELL KNOWN FOOTY GAME that we won't mention's tactical screen. Only on its side.

NICK NICK

Anyone attempting to pick the best golf game on the Amiga would have a terrible dilemma on their hands. Nick Faldo? No, PGA European Tour. No, Nick Faldo. No, no, definitely PGA European Tour. No...Oh dear.

Anyway, Nick Faldo is really good, particularly in its revamped CD32 form (AP36 88%). But that, as it transpires, isn't the end of the story. Grand Slam will shortly be releasing a Deluxe Edition (of it) which sounds even better still. We're slightly confused as to how it's being improved, exactly, but the graphics are supposed to be even better still, there's more speech and the controls have had further tweaking. What a month, eh, sportsters?

ANGST

POWER PREVIEW

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: DEM Software

Author: John Georgeadis (code), Donald E Kittle (graphics), DEM (design)

ETA: Mid-1995

We first saw this Canadian Dungeon Master-with-guns game back in AP44, when it was called

Paranoia. WHY HAVE THEY CHANGED THE NAME?

Anyway, Dungeon Master-with-guns it is and, as the accompanying notes waffle pompously (why do programmers insist on writing docs in the literary equivalent of John Gielgud declaiming the role of Titus Andronicus? "Angst is a first-person-perspective space RPG that smoothly scrolls the star of the game through dank, dilapidated hallways of a cargo freighter" indeed) the designers were inspired by the creepy erk-it's-round-the-cornerness of the Alien and Aliens films. Recalling fondly the 8-bit Electric Dreams version of Aliens, which with the barest graphics and sound that went bip-bip-bip-bee-bee-BEEE when an alien rushed out at you managed to be one of the authentically scariest games ever, I sat down to the demo of Angst with Glee, the Orange Juice of Champions.

"Corridors and quail"

The plot remains the same: you, a humble lift operator, are somehow the sole survivor of an alien attack on a big spaceship. YOU MUST ESCAPE.

Because you are such a lowly employee, you don't have clearance for security doors and the like, so must loot the bodies of people you find for passes and equipment. Apparently all the monsters have been drawn on special computers so they look unpleasantly soft and extra-scary, but, oddly, despite the paragraphs given over to explaining the special drawing techniques no mention is made in the notes of the sound, which is terrific. You can listen with apprehension to monsters breathing in the distance, tremble to their thumping footsteps as they prowl the corridors and quail before their grotesque trumpeting as they spot you and give chase. Let us hope you have not run out of bullets when this happens, as the multi-decked spaceship is (gngh) a maze, with dead ends and everything. (It does say in the instructions that the dead ends are a 'feature' though, so that's all right then.)

Angst shall appear sometime next month, when we shall pass judgment on whether its intriguing mix of get object-use object puzzles and ka-chak BLANG! monster death terror action is indeed a Good Thing.

ONE OF OUR FAVOURITE FILMS

WIN!

Do you know how sometimes a film doesn't have to be all that good to be enjoyable? Well, Medusa Pictures are releasing Evolver for video rental in mid-April, and although it's complete nonsense throughout, and every twist and turn is entirely predictable, it's still a bit of a hoot.

Directed and written by Mark "Who?" Rosman, and with a full star line up including Ethan "Eh?" Randall and John De "Never Heard Of Him" Lancia, Evolver's all to do with computer games and robots and things, and therefore just about qualifies for us to mention it here.

Thrill! As the main teenager wins a hyper intelligent robot in a Virtual Reality arcade contest!

Swoon! At the exciting home laser tag games, with the Evolver robot roaming the house firing rubber balls and the kids returning fire with laser guns!

Gaspl! As the Evolver turns out to be the offshoot of a military program, goes a bit raving mad bonkers and starts replacing its rubbery projectiles with ball bearings and steak knives!

In a kind of Short Circuit meets Freddy Kruger scenario, the movie flits amiably across the retina for a good 90 minutes and, either intentionally or otherwise, features numerous prime comedy moments, from the video recording of the military version gunning down soldiers to the laughable way every victim is hit in the leg first so that the Evolver has a chance of keeping up with them on its little trundly wheels.

It's hugely entertaining in an airhead, trashy kind of way, and we've got five copies to give away. All you have to do is tell us the names of the computer in Blake's 7 that was clearly built out of a fish tank, and the computer that Twiki wore as a medallion in Buck Rogers. Write the answers on the back of a postcard and send it to "I Fancied Genna More Than Calley", AMIGA POWER, 30 Monmouth St, Bath BA1 2BW before the end of April.

REJOICE! OH, REJOICE!

THIS ONE'S BETTER THAN THAT ERIC SYKES SKETCH COMPO

Yup, it's compo winner time again, and the first lot are profiting from the US Gold compo we ran back in AP43, in which we challenged you to send us a picture of you playing golf in an interesting or unusual place. Needless to say, not many of you backpacked up the Himalayas with a four iron and a Polaroid camera, but a good many of you cut out pictures and faked it convincingly. Well, reasonably convincingly. Anyway, the winning picture was hilarious, but we've lost it so you'll just have to take our word for it.

David Goffin from Guisborough won the CD32, the lucky chappy, and all of these people got US Gold goody bags:

Craig Stokes, Poole
Mark Thomas, Brighton
Rebecca Thornton, South Shields
Windolene Drandaltz, Nieuw Vennup, Holland
Richard Delafield, West Houghton
Charlie Worsley, Guernsey

DREAM ON SUNSHINE COMPO

AP42 saw Empire offering tickets for ten to Alton Towers (the theme park now sinisterly linked to AMIGA POWER) in our Dream Web compo. All you had to do was link the descriptions of dream-related movies to their titles thus:

- The Muppet Christmas Carol saw Michael Caine being mourned by a frog, a pig and a bear.
- The Last Temptation of Christ saw our hero waking up nailed to a cross.
- T2 saw a woman dreaming that the world was destroyed by nuclear explosions.
- A man dreamt of being a fashion designer in The Secret Life of Walter Mitty.
- Harrison Ford dreams of unicorns in Blade Runner.
- Is a mineworker actually a spy? We find out in Total Recall.
- A young girl kills a pair of old ladies in The Wizard of Oz.
- Winnie the Pooh dreamt of sweet-toothed monsters.
- A little girl overthrows the monarchy in Alice In Wonderland.
- The dramatic waterfall rescue was a dream in Canoe Squad: The Movie.

Tracy Owen from Bristol knew all this already, and we reward her with ten tickets to Alton Towers, whereas this lot get a pair of tickets each and a copy of Dream Web.

"THE ASSYRIANS CAME DOWN LIKE ZEEWOLF ON THE FOLD..."

Zeewolf is about to sire an offspring. And you can be part of it.

At least that's what Lord Byron (Father of Ada, the flaky programmer of Babbage's Analytical Engine. — Ed) reckoned in his fearsome poem Destruction of Sennacherib. Sort of. And you know, even though he's been dead for over 170 years now, we feel that if he were around today, he'd agree with AMIGA POWER that when it comes to shooting-at-domes-from-helicopter games, Zeewolf (AP44, 90%) is the poet's only choice.

Maybe it's due to the programming genius of Count Wilton, Lord Of All Spheres, or maybe it's because it cleverly takes the best bits from Desert Strike and the classic Virus, but for whatever reason, it's a smart and dandy shooty game of epic proportions and impressive length. But now, we're told, a single game simply isn't enough to contain the might that is Zeewolf.

Prepare yourselves, mere mortals, there's a sequel afoot.

NEW STUFF

Asylum are taking this opportunity to correct a few of the original game's annoying glitches (such as the guns locking onto dead enemies) and also adding to the original. You'll now be able to take to air, land or sea in your pursuit of sobbing and poorly-armed enemies thanks to the introduction of tanks, boats and new aircraft. We've seen this kind of thing before of course, ironically in the sequel to the game that Zeewolf was inevitably compared to, but unlike the linear way vehicle swaps are used in Jungle Strike, Asylum plan to turn them into a puzzle element. For instance, you might have to airstrike a base protected by radar-guided missiles, but first have to knock out a bunker housing a generator using the tank. Or something like that anyway. One thing we noticed when we played it was that even though you could pick tanks up and then twirl them round really fast, they just dropped down when you released them instead of flying off due to centripetal acceleration like they should, but we've already told Asylum, and they're considering changing it. Such is our might.

NEW CHALLENGES

Now whereas the readers of other magazines might flee in terror and dash for cover before the inevitable onslaught of Zeewolf 2, we know you're of hardier stock. Whenever we set you the challenge of contributing to a game rather than passively consuming it, you rise to it admirably, adding actual levels or characters to Cannon Fodder 2 and the Shadow Fighter expansion pack. Binary Asylum are absolutely gagging for new ideas for Zeewolf 2, and after giving them a bit of a slap behind the bike sheds, we've got them to agree to stump up some prizes as well, so the designer of the best level will get:

- His (or her) name credited before the level in the finished game.
- A copy of the game, natch.
- £200 of honest-to-goodness CASH!

Since we know you're all great, Asylum aren't putting an upper limit on the number of levels that they'll include in the game, so the runners-up will get all the same honour and glory as the winner, plus a copy of the game, but not the cash. Never mind though, that's what being a runner-up's all about, isn't it? So pens and pencils at the ready, and plough your way through these easy-to-follow instructions:

EASY-TO-FOLLOW INSTRUCTIONS

1 Photocopy the map, enlarging it up to at least A4-size, or draw it out a couple of times.

2 Place bases on the islands: blue for friendly bases, red for enemy ones. Add any roads, but make sure they only run vertically or horizontally. No diagonals. Clearly mark buildings as squares and domes as circles. Add your helicopter's supply ship.

3 On the same map as the buildings, mark all friendly and enemy ground vehicles and weapons. It doesn't matter if you write next to them, or use coloured dots or little shapes, just put a clear key at the side so we know what you're on about. There's no upper limit to the number of vehicles, but anything over about 50 would be getting silly. The vehicles are on the next page.

4 Mark the routes of moving vehicles clearly with lines and numbered waypoints. For convoys and mass attacks, you only need one line. Don't ask us why, but boats can't move at all.

5 On the second map, repeat steps 3 and 4 for enemy aircraft.

6 Write a mission plan. You can have up to four stages, and each must be clearly explained in a couple of lines, eg 1 — Destroy all enemy planes. 2 — Destroy enemy base defences, etc...

7 You should now have two easy-to-read maps and a mission briefing. Add your name and address, staple them all together and send them (before March 31st, 1995) to I'm Confused — What Exactly Was The Link Between A Dead Romantic Poet And A High Tech Killing Machine? Compo, AMIGA POWER, 30 Monmouth St, Bath BA1 2BW.

BEAR – Enemy tank. HIPPO is amphibious version.

VTOL – Blue ones are friendly, green are lethal.

SHARK – Rapid firing but immobile enemy boat.

PELICAN – Protect these on escort missions.

WASP – Weak enemy. VULTURES are meaner.

MANTIS – AAA battery. COBRAS fire missiles.

CAMEL – Mobile friendly fuel and ammo resupply.

WATCHDOG – Enemy radar that locks missiles to you.

RHINO – Enemy mobile AAA with fast rate of fire.

IT IS THE SAME.
BUT IT IS DIFFERENT

THE CRIME: Games that are like other games but are not as good as those games.

THE CASE FOR THE PROSECUTION: Now this is one we cannot understand. Like people enjoying Stargate or thinking 'Beat Takeshi is a competent director, the concept of someone releasing a game that is like another game but which is not as good a game as that game is so utterly alien to us that we simply fail to grasp it. It's understandable up to a point – a company looks at, say, Sensible Soccer, a massively popular game creating a benchmark in its field and thinks, hello, there's money to be made here – but ignoring the reasons why Sensi was so much fun and instead banging out, for instance, Manchester United Premier League Champions, Football Glory or World Cup Year '94, clones that succeed only in parroting Sensi's look, absolutely confuses us.

It's the same in every genre. The Secret of Monkey Island changed the face of point-and-click adventures FOREVER!, except, of course, it didn't as, for example, Universe and the King's Quest and Leisure Suit Larry series went to show. Mortal Kombat demonstrated that beat-'em-ups could work on the Amiga: Dangerous Streets, Elfmania, Risible Robots and, er, Mortal Kombat 2 reiterated they couldn't. Second Samurai shook the platform game by the throat: Dennis and Marvin's Marvellous Adventure shook it limply by the hand. Sabre Team showed up Hero Quest and made it look like a rubbishy old boardgame: Hero Quest 2 showed up and looked like Hero Quest.

Why do companies persist in these futile ventures? We keep explaining they're rubbish, Amiga owners keep from buying them, publishers keep turning up with more of them. Hey – carry on like this and we'll start to think the games themselves don't matter to you companies and that instead of investing time and effort in nurturing talented programmers like the people behind Gravity Force 2 and Shadow Fighter, you're more interested in quick slackly-programmed cash-in lookalikes to fool indulgent grandparents and stupid fanboys, eh? Eh? Eh?

You vicious scummy pointy-headed impotent incestuous child-murdering friendless bastard spawn of a weasel.

THE PENALTY

First offence: 20%-50% off
Second offence: 40%-98% off
Third offence: Death.

ISLE NOT BE BACK

Fans of complicated German strategy games were dealt a blow this month with Blue Byte's announcement that they'll no longer be writing Amiga games, preferring instead to concentrate on the PC. That means there's no chance of seeing Battle Isle 2, which is a shame as the PC version is absolutely brilliant. Blue Byte claim it was a tough decision to make. But they made it anyway.

SNOW SENSE TO IT

We were just wondering: Why are thousands of Amiga owners buying US Gold's Winter Olympics every month – it's been riding high in the charts for ages. Look, it's awful (AP36 48%), and the Winter Olympics were dead and buried over a year ago. Maybe some shops are selling unsold copies off cheap. But that's no excuse. What's the matter with you all? Stop it.

AMIGA POWER RECOMMENDS

And when AMIGA POWER recommends, the world takes notice. Or it should.

SHADOW FIGHTER

(AP46 91%)

To Mr Software Publisher, searching frantically for inspiration, a beat-'em-up must sound temptingly straightforward. A few characters to choose from, some attractive parallax backgrounds, and some punches and kicks, and you've got yourself a Street Fighter beater. But no! There's much more to beat-'em-ups than that, as Shadow Fighter proves with its excellent range of characters, subtle special moves, cheeky combos and an overwhelming sense of fun. Play it.

SUBWAR 2050

(AP45 82%)

Submarine simulators will never be exciting, because the friction caused when objects are forced through water means everything happens at a slow pace. But Subwar 2050 is a highly successful attempt to inject a bit of 'oomph' into the genre, with a sinister setting and a range of futuristic weaponry. In many ways it's more like a flight sim than a submarine sim, because the vessels of 20 years hence are so manoeuvrable.

If you're in any doubt as to whether games can be as exciting as real life, try out Roadkill. If we were to repeat the experiments of our Games vs Reality feature in AP42, the equipment would quite possibly malfunction due to overloading. The voiceover, which hisses "Take his life!" and "Get the Super Jackpot!", has a lot to do with this, as do the terrifying homing missiles and spiked-studded walls. For now, at least, it remains our favourite overhead-view driving game.

BUBBLE AND SQUEAK A500

(AP45 83%)

If Bubble and Squeak is not a huge sales success then a terrible crime will have been committed. That's why we're featuring the A500 version on one of our coverdisks this month – so that you may try it out and see for yourself what a fine game it is. The two-character idea is a good one, and works better in the 500 version thanks to the improved intelligence of the computer-controlled Blue Thing. And the puzzles are fiendish, and the action frequently bizarre.

THE DELPHINE CLASSIC COLLECTION

(AP46 90%)

It's hard to imagine a more sensible way to spend £30 than this. For your money you get a huge box packed to the gunnals with disks, each one forming a component of one of Delphine's famous adventure games. Future Wars and Operation Stealth are old but still good, Cruise For A Corpse is a terribly good detective game, Another World is a wonderful cinematic platform adventure, and Flashback is its larger (but not quite so imaginative) sequel.

RUFFIAN

Publisher: Grandslam

Author: Bob Tomlinson, Mike Farrington

Release: Easter

I could be charitable about Ruffian and say that it's not yet ready for release and that the game's going to be tweaked and that I've only seen the first level so it might get better later on, but why bother? It's going to be another useless platform game devoid of feeling, entertainment and interest. I look forward to the game being released so that some other member of the AP team can spend a miserable afternoon listlessly playing this before slugging it off mercilessly.

Have you ever wondered who buys these games or why software companies even bother to release this junk? I'll tell you. Games of this low-quality ilk are marketed specifically to appeal to parents and grandparents who know nothing about games but think that a game with a cute jungle boy on the box will be far more entertaining and less damaging to the development of their offspring than one fronted with a full-colour picture of a bloke shoving four feet of cold steel through an alien rhino-man. If companies get enough copies of this tat on enough shelves, then someone, somewhere will buy a copy.

Games like this are proposed by men in suits who refer to games as "products" and get all their information about "the kids" from computer trade papers, the same papers that reckoned Rise Of The Robots was a good thing because Time Warner Interactive had spent a small fortune on TV advertising.

So what do you want to know about the game then? That you've got to rescue pixies from plants before they're digested?

That if you leave the Ruffian alone for long enough, he makes kooky faces and waves at you? That it's coming out at a budget price? If Grandslam have got any sense, they'll lock every copy in a petrol filled basement until the disks melt away into green, toxic sludge.

● CAM WINSTANLEY

IN THE STYLE OF

Being suckers for anything with us in it, we found Eddie Ross of Victoria, Australia's A Big-Name Software House's Campaign Against AMIGA POWER In The Style Of Floor 13 tremendously amusing (Floor 13 being an obscure point-and-click adventure from 1992, distinguished by its black-and-white graphics). We're printing it a bit bigger than usual so you can read the tiny writing. In fact, the only thing wrong with it is a minor grammatical error whereby 'won't' is spelled 'wont'. But this is so insignificant that we've only reduced Eddie's mark – otherwise 4/10 – by 2, so he scores 2/10 and will be receiving £40-worth of games in the post.

Should you wish to contribute to In The Style Of, and earn the chance to win up to £200-worth of free games, send your entry on a Deluxe Paint-readable disk marked with your name and address to: In The Style Of, AMIGA POWER, 30 Monmouth Street, Bath BA1 2BW.

DOOM ON THE AMIGA 2

"No, come on, when?" pleads AP reader Roy Nesbit of Crewe. Again, we answer him.

So Death Mask is out, then (see page 40). And it's sort of all right, but not Doom. AMIGA POWER has therefore been investigating the progress of the Amiga games industry since our feature in AP45. Are we any closer to seeing Doom – but on the Amiga?

Yes. Grandslam this month disclosed that they're negotiating with a mysterious group of programmers in Poland (or somewhere – like everything else Doom – but on the Amiga-related, they're shrouded in secrecy) who're working on a game with the working title 'Wolfenstein'. Now, Wolfenstein was the game that came before Doom on the PC, so Grandslam will have to change the name before they release it, but apart from that it looks rather promising.

We've only seen an incredibly early demo of 'Wolfenstein' – just one level without any monsters in it. (We did bump into a sort of skeleton thing, but he didn't give us any trouble, and we didn't have a gun to shoot him with anyway.) But it's got a pretty authentic Doom look, with proper texture-mapped scenery instead of Death Mask's trick 3D. And the screen bobs up and down as you walk. There's even some unpleasant rave music in the background which must be a good sign. The only thing is, the view moves around a little jerkily, but this may well be improved by the time the game is released "some time after Easter".

Even more Doom-looking, however, is the poorly-titled Poom, which made its way to AMIGA POWER by a rather circuitous route and seems to be some sort of shareware demo written by one Jarno Kilpi of Finland. As usual, it's in a semi-finished state and there are no monsters to shoot, but the 3D scrolling is excellent, with moody scenery and doors that slide open sinisterly. The text file that comes with it suggests that the game has been knocking around since last summer, so if Jarno's reading (which he surely is), perhaps he could send us a more up-to-date version.

But to be honest, the closest we've yet come to Doom – but on the Amiga came while we were reassessing Knights Of The Sky this month for Dawn Patrol comparison purposes. Jonathan and Cam had been pursuing each other around the heavens for a while and had damaged each others' engines. Circling lower and lower, they eventually found themselves on the ground, unable to get up enough steam to lift off again. So they were reduced to taxiing around, ducking behind buildings and trees and taking pot-shots at each other. And it was incredibly good fun.

Poom.

Getting warmer.

"In fact it's better than Doom," says Cam, "because: a) you can change the view to, for example, an overhead one; b) you can cheat by taking off slightly and hoping your opponent won't notice; and c) it takes more skill because of the way your bullets arc, which means you can only hit your opponent at a certain range."

Try it and see, Roy.

More fun than Doom.

NEW!

Nothing may be withheld from...

THE DISSEMINATOR

There is only one excusable reason for buying an Amiga magazine other than AMIGA POWER and that is to compare their almost certainly ill-informed conclusions about games with our REVIEWS THAT ARE ALWAYS RIGHT. Well, THE DISSEMINATOR now imparts this information directly to your cerebral cortex. Each month we shall print the scores recent releases have received in each Amiga games magazine, saving you a magnificent £7.90 in wasteful mag spendage, and allowing our scores to stand PROUD AND TRUE while perhaps revealing DISTURBING TRENDS in the scores of others.

	The One	Amiga Action	AMIGA POWER
Aladdin	92%	92%	86%
All-New World of Lemmings	89%	87%	50%
Cannon Fodder 2	85%	80%	89%
Football Glory	74%	90%	68%
Guardian	88%	89%	90%
Jungle Strike	86%	90%	77%
Mortal Combat 2	90%	93%	63%
Rise Of The Robots	59%	92%	5%
Sensible World Of Soccer	90%	95%	95%
Shadow Fighter	36%	90%	91%
The Lion King	77%	93%	59%
Tower Assault	86%	91%	46%
Zeewolf	80%	85%	90%

EVEN CLOCKWISER

It is more fun than it looks. Truly.

One of our favourite puzzle games of the last seven months is Rasputin's Clockwiser, a curious rotating-rectangles-of-blocks-around-into-the-right-sequence game which we awarded a hugely respectable 79% in AP40. And now it's coming out on the CD32, with 250 levels (as opposed to the disk version's 110) and a CD soundtrack, natch. The big just got bigger.

NO. BUT YES!

For those not content with handing over a mere £43 for the privilege of playing Rise of the Robots, it is now possible to visit your local amusement arcade and pay yet more. The Rise of the Robots coin-op has just been launched, and features many enhancements to the Amiga version including "more robots, a robot versus robot option and" – get this – "the ability to jump over opponents." Well done Time Warner.

You've won again. That's incredible.

DEBUNKING

"THIRD WORLD THREAT TO HIGH-TECH JOBS DEBUNKED," runs the headline on a press release we were sent this month by People Management ("the magazine for professionals in personnel, training and development"). The text goes on to explain: "Doom laden warnings that high-tech jobs in the UK will be lost to low-paying countries like India are massively over-simplified," and agrees with the US Labour Secretary, Robert Reich, that "international trade is working to your advantage". We felt we should pass this information on to you.

WIN! SMALL PLASTIC AIRCRAFT

As Empire departed our office having brought us Dawn Patrol, they left in their wake 20 small plastic aircraft, each doubly emblazoned with the Dawn Patrol logo. Their suggestion was that we pass them on to you, the readers, which we now intend to do. And we'll be packaging them in pairs, so that 10 readers may stage dogfights in their homes. First, however, you must tell us the number of enemy aircraft a World War 1 pilot was required to shoot down before being recognised as an ace. Write this information on the back of a postcard with your name and address and send it to: Kite Compo, AMIGA POWER, 30 Monmouth Street, Bath BA1 2BW.

Bless the poor of the parish with...

Mystery Screenshot Corner

Correctly identifying January's picture of Bio Challenge caused little trouble to the keen-eyed disciples of the strange interlude that is Mystery Screenshot Corner. Many entrants supplied unlooked-for additional information on the company and programmers involved, while Christopher Hamilton of Grangemouth, Scotland missed the point entirely by mocking the screenshot's having been taken from Level One of the game so we threw his entry in the bin and bestowed championship upon Francis Bowers of Sheffield instead.

It is apparent that the mutation of Mystery Screenshot Corner from a vehicle to divine the identity of publicity photographs that had become detached from their explanatory letters into a parlour game of smugness and oneupmanship strikes a chord of concord in those foolhardy readers ever eager to test their mettle against the mighty beings of AMIGA POWER. Bear witness now to the retaliatory measures you begat as we demand of you the identity of the game of a screenshot whose fearsome powers of obscurity caused the Crawford Brothers, famous Victorian authors of Enquire Within Upon Everything, to flee shrieking into the night. Address your hopeful divinations to Arthur C Clarke's World of Strange and Mysterious Screenshots, with the traditional continuation.

Your reward for such a testing venture? Our complicated and seemingly contradictory secret rules do not permit us to reveal to non-winners as to the nature of the prize any clue but the tempting morsel that, perhaps, there is none beyond the immortal celebrity of a name-check in these mighty pages. Only half-nelsons in the mental wrestling match that is Mystery Screenshot Corner shall ever know the truth.

WHATEVER HAPPENED TO ALL THE DINOSAUR GAMES?

Once dinosaur games ruled the Earth. Rarely a month would go by without a new Chuck Rock game, or an Ugh!, an Ergh! or an Ook! But then, suddenly, overnight, they all disappeared. Why? What happened? Jonathan Davies expounds some shocking new theories...

Imagine a scene on your bedroom floor many years ago. A copy of Bignose The Caveman stands by the water's edge, drinking peacefully. The sun is hot, and it is so thirsty that it does not notice the movement in the trees behind it. With a deafening roar, Chuck Rock 2 makes its move. It leaps onto Bignose The Caveman's back and attempts to lock its cruel jaws around the slow-witted herbivore's neck. But it is defeated by the smaller dinosaur game's armoured collar, and Bignose The Caveman is able to turn and face its hunter. It lowers its head and charges, Chuck Rock 2 howling with pain as Bignose The Caveman's horns tear into its belly. The wound is not fatal, but Chuck Rock 2 knows it has met its match. It retreats back into the trees in search of easier prey, leaving Bignose the Caveman to lick its wounds.

The earliest traces of dinosaur games are the remains of The Flintstones by Grandslam, which lived on Earth as many as six years ago, during the period known as the BAPassic Era. Little is known about this primitive game, except that it appeared on a compilation called the Grandslam Collection, and probably survived on a diet of fruit and small amphibians. Scientists are agreed that it was probably dreadful.

The age of the dinosaur games truly began in May 1991, which by coincidence is the month that AMIGA POWER was launched. Chuck Rock (AP1 86%) was the length of six double-decker buses, and set the mould for many subsequent dinosaur games with its blend of platform-hopping and comical dinosaur-related japey. Some scientists believe that Chuck himself was a rather charmless character, with his oversized stomach and greasy skin, but they are in the minority. Chuck Rock later evolved into Chuck Rock 2 (AP24 83%), which was similar in appearance but larger and a little more varied.

The Chuck Rock family of dinosaur games is a large one, encompassing a variety of other platform-based games. Ubi Soft's BC Kid (AP20 89%) had Chuck Rock's dinosaur-filled platforms, but dispensed with its puzzley gameplay and large dorsal fin. A tremendous game. The slow-moving Joe & Mac Caveman Ninja (AP22 22%), on the other hand, took on board the using-dinosaurs-to-do-things-for-you approach, but was ruined by terrible controls and awful animation. Bignose The Caveman (AP26 63%) was described by Tim Tucker as "a poor man's Chuck Rock". Little larger than a baboon, it was rather simple and unengaging. And Zone Warrior (AP7 42%) wasn't technically a dinosaur game, but the first level had a prehistoric setting, and it was so abysmal that it's unlikely anyone would have wanted to play much further into it anyway.

Other dinosaur games were more diverse. The primeval swamps echoed to the haunting call of Metal Mutant (AP5 78%) from Silmarils. This graceful arcade puzzler featured robotic dinosaurs who could transform into other things, and proved to be entertaining as well as attractive. In contrast, Dinosaur Detective Agency (AP33 60%) was rather dull. It only gave you one life, so every time your crime-busting herbivore keeled over you got sent all the way back to the beginning. In common with Metal Mutant, however, Dinosaur Detective Agency was unusual in featuring a dinosaur as its hero; normally they're cast in the role of the oppressor.

Just as they were in Ugh! (AP15 79%), for example. This was a Scandinavian puzzle game where you had to move a little crate around the screen, ferrying cavemen from place to place. It was good fun, although its vast bodyweight (equal to that of 675 men) meant that it had to spend most of its life in the water.

Perhaps the strangest of all the dinosaur games was Dino Wars (AP6 45%). It was kind of like chess, only with dinosaurs as the pieces, and whenever one piece attacked another you entered a dreadful beat-

"Little larger than a baboon"

DINOSAUR GAME TIMELINE

It is impossible to conceive just how long ago the dinosaur games lived. If today was a Matchbox car, for example, the dinosaur games would have lived as long ago as a slightly-longer-than-usual bus. One of those foreign ones that bend in the middle, perhaps. Only a bit shorter. Examine this timeline for a better understanding of their reign.

THE AMIGA IN A DAY

Incredibly, if the history of the Amiga was compressed into one 24-hour day (Fig 6), then the dinosaur games would have arrived at about half-past nine, and not disappeared until tea time. This issue of AMIGA POWER would have existed only for the last twenty minutes....

Fig 6: The Amiga in a day.

Aaargh! Dinosaurs such as this Tyrannosaurus Rex were very frightening.

'em-up sub-game. A real-time mode added interest, avoiding the need to sit around waiting for the other player to move, but there wasn't really enough to it. It was length of twelve double-decker buses and a Toyota Corolla.

Something of a mystery, however, is a dinosaur game called Entity. The few traces of it which have been unearthed show it to have been a scrolling beat-'em-up starring a woman with big bosoms who hits lots of dinosaurs. But a complete skeleton has never been found, and it is not considered to have been a great evolutionary success.

In fact, the failure of Entity in a way reflects the failure of the dinosaur game as a whole. Because suddenly, approximately eight months ago, following the brief appearance of a couple of prehistoric characters in Bump and Burn, there were no more dinosaur games.

The disappearance of the dinosaur games has long baffled scientists, and many theories have been put forward to try to explain their extinction. These are the three most popular:

DINOSAUR GAME EXTINCTION THEORY 1

They were superseded by games featuring mammals, such as Brian the Lion and Cannon Fodder.

It is possible that, as mammal games became more widespread, they prevented the dinosaur

HOW DO WE KNOW ABOUT THE DINOSAUR GAMES?

The strongest evidence for the existence of the dinosaur games is in the form of fossils. But how were these fossils formed?

Dinosaur game is bought.

After being played for a few days, dinosaur game is put in back of cupboard.

Dust slowly covers game.

More dust settles...

...and is joined by old copies of Smash Hits, outmoded clothing and unfavourable school reports. As the debris around it is compressed, the game becomes preserved forever.

Much later, erosion caused by the tidying of the cupboard reveals the fossil.

Scientists carefully chip away the surrounding rock and the game can be removed and studied.

Once these majestic animals roamed the shelves of WH Smith at will. Sadly they are no more.

DINOSAUR GAME EXTINCTION THEORY 2

A giant asteroid (from Asteroids) collided with the Amiga world, causing a cloud of dust to rise into the air.

There is strong evidence for this theory in the form of AP42, which immediately followed the release of Bump and Burn, the last ever dinosaur game. It may be no coincidence that the cover featured Super Stardust, the return of the long-absent Asteroids in a new and more deadly form. Most types of games could have ridden through it, while the dinosaur games, with their need to eat constantly, would have been unable to survive such a catastrophe.

DINOSAUR GAME EXTINCTION THEORY 3

They were unable to adapt to the change in climate which accompanied the arrival of slippery-slidey ice worlds.

An increase in the number of slippery-slidey ice worlds in platform games did indeed coincide with the demise of the dinosaur games. In their place came Arctic-dwelling games such as the giant woolly Robinson's Requiem.

Scientists will probably never agree on exactly why the dinosaur games died out, and the supply of new theories seems endless. But the Amiga world is certainly a poorer place for the loss of these terrifying but beautiful creatures.

"A complete skeleton has never been found"

INCREDIBLE BUT TRUE

- Chuck Rock 2 was over 3,500K in length, but had a brain the size of a plum.
- BC Kid had a novel form of protection: when startled it could spit a deadly codeword up to 25 metres.
- Metal Mutants, by Silmarils, was as high as twelve 14-year-old girls.
- Early dinosaur game specialists believed that the flying crates in Ugh! were horns mounted on the game's head. It was only later that their true purpose was discovered – lethal big-toes which could gouge out the eyes of another dinosaur game.
- The Flintstones was believed extinct until 1991, when sightings of a living example were reported by pearl divers off the coast of Zaïre.
- Pengo is the closest living relative of the dinosaur games.

BRINGING THE DINOSAUR GAMES BACK TO LIFE

With the current rate of progress in genetic engineering, many readers may be wondering if it will eventually become possible to recreate the games of the past here in the present. Some scientists believe that by combining fragments of fossilised dinosaur game bytes (Fig 14a) with the genetic fingerprint of a frog (Fig 14b), and then injecting the result into a penguin egg, it might be possible to hatch a new-born dinosaur game. Indeed, such a technique is currently being experimented with at Time Warner, with the early results appearing promising (Fig 14c).

Fig 14a: Over 1000 'bytes' such as these are necessary to describe one game.

WHAT IF...?

What if the dinosaur games had never died out, but had instead continued evolving to fill the role currently occupied by the latest beat-'em-ups and driving games? Our artist's impression shows how a modern-day dinosaur game might look.

"You're a loser baby, so why don't we kill you?" asks Cam Winstanley.

I hate people who cheat. I think they should be put to the sword as a warning to others. On national TV. Just after the National Lottery on Saturday evenings. Liars and thieves too. Kill 'em all, that's my opinion. Dishonesty sucks and I should know, for only this weekend someone stole my rather flashy and cool Uzi airgun that fires little plastic pellets. Bastards.

Cheating in games is, as we tell you constantly, a completely dumb thing to do. At least if you're blackhearted and soulless enough to, for instance, break into a pensioner's flat on a sheltered accommodation estate and steal her life savings from the ageing shoebox on top of her cupboard, then you'll end up with loads of cash to spend on your scurrilous and miscreant lifestyle. But what happens if you cheat at games? You finish them quicker, that's what, knocking anything from a few hours to months off the shelf life of something you've just forked out 30 quid or so on. So you're the one who loses. You're the one who has to save up another 30 quid (Or go and raid another pensioner's shoebox. - Ed) before you can buy another game so you can spoil it for yourself. Again.

But everything (apart from pregnancy and death, perhaps) has various stages of wrongness, ranging from mildly wrong matters such as not returning your library books in time and eating peas off your knife to really, really incredibly wrong things such as starting World War 2, selling off the nation's assets to bigwig financial fatcats and stealing my BB airgun. Cheats in games can be beneficial and fun, but this is very rare indeed. And, although we have occasion to find game cheats mildly helpful when compiling our mighty magazine, as HONEST AND UPRIGHT CITIZENS OF THE TRUENIVERSE we damn them as DOORCODES TO THE GATES OF HELL ITSELF.

In our view, it is easier for a fat kid in a Poison T-shirt to pass through the eye of a needle than it is for a game cheat to find the favour of AMIGA POWER. If you CHEAT then you are a SINNER. Sinners have no more right to live on God's clean earth than a weasel and shall be CAST into the PIT when the Four Cyclists of the Apocalypse return to REND THE WORLD ASUNDER. However, being the caring beneficent mighty beings that we are, we now give you a chance to QUANTIFY YOUR SINS and ATONE TO SAVE YOUR IMMORTAL SOULS. Categorise yourself according to these explanatory delineations and PAY THE PRESCRIBED PENALTY BEFORE IT IS TOO LATE.

A PLEASANT GARDEN ADJOINING EDEN

SPECIFICATION: Cheats that make games harder or give them a new twist.
AMIGA POWER'S RESPONSE: A firmly emplaced seal of approval.
SIN RATING: Zero
PENANCE: Buying yourself a delicious sandwich and sitting out in the park eating it, while listening to the unforgettably whistly theme tune of Terry Nutkins' Wildtrack on your Walkman.

IK+

Pressing T on the keyboard in this most fearsomely entertaining beat-'em-up will make your opponent's trousers fall down. The programmers quickly realised this wasn't so much a cheat as a special move and so transferred it to the CD32 version, where you press the red button.

Supercars

If you type in POOR as your name then you'll actually be hindered by being given the miserable sum of five pounds in your bank account. If you can still win then truly you are a mighty bronzed gaming Adonis bathed in golden sunlight and we salute you.

Banshee

Type in MARY WHITEHOUSE at the beginning to access the graphic violence mode, allowing you to shoot the fishermen, the polar bears, the mothers pushing the prams and the blokes hiding in the phone boxes. This can only add to your enjoyment and since Core wimped out by censoring these acts of senseless violence in the first place it's only fair that we return them to you.

Theme Park

Build a bouncy castle and a roller coaster. Arrange for the bouncy castle to explode on March 15th. Using a maintenance man who hasn't yet fixed anything, rebuild the castle directly to the left of the rubble. Now wait for a sinister teddy man to entertain a red-jacketed boy in the queue to the roller coaster and as the boy gets on to the ride quickly type A CLOWN IS MY FRIEND, A CLOWN WILL NOT BITE ME OR THROW ME IN THE BASEMENT (without spaces). The adviser will now ask if you want to play Sinister Theme Park. Press Y.

Gravity Force 2

Make sure that the arrow's not on the Start Game option and type in GLAPPKONTAKT, which is Swedish for 'dodgy engine'. We think. Your rocket engine will now splutter and misfire throughout the game, usually at the exact moment you need to thrust out of danger. We smirk at such random misfortune.

Shadow Fighter

One of the few criticisms we levelled at Shadow Fighter when we reviewed it was that you couldn't 'be'

Pupazz, the spooky punch bag character. TRUST THE MIGHTY WORDS OF AMIGA POWER TO BE HEEDED. Go to the options screen and type in PARAPONZIPOPO to 'be' this scary puppet. You can also MBARIVIDISOCCAFARIMBARI to 'be' the Shadow Fighter himself, AN ENHANCEMENT WE DID NOT EVEN DEMAND.

THE 12.03 SPECIAL TO HELL

SIN RATING: LOWSPECIFICATION: Cheats that lessen a game's challenge.AMIGA POWER'S RESPONSE: Low-key tutting and general disapproval.PENANCE: Sitting in a sauna wearing an 80% wool, 20% fibreglass jumper while listening to the Beautiful South's cover version of Paula Abdul's 'Girlfriend'.Cannon Fodder

Typing in JOOLSRIP as a save game name will make the leader of your team a four-star General, giving you an unfair and undeserved advantage over the enemy.

Zeewolf

The true way to play the plane is to play all the way through all of the missions, but you can deviously shortcut that by typing in FRAMPAGE. Okay, so playing the plane is actually harder than the chopper, but that's no excuse for cheating. Oh no.

Zool 2

You could play the game properly, gaining our smiling approval, and collect all the relevant bonuses to get to the end of level bonus subgame involving the funny, two-headed dog-thing running around, or you could sneakily type in NAPOLEON to get the bonus level at the end of every stage. You rogue.

Syndicate

Naming your company WATCH THE CLOCK speeds the passing of the days so you won't have to wait as long for the tax money to flood into your coffers. You disreputable blackguard.

Pinball Fantasies

Want some cheats for a pinball game? Then you're an extremely miserable individual indeed. We can almost understand wanting to cheat to get to a distant level, but to disreputably notch up points? That's dismally poor. Anyway, if you really must, type in EXTRA BALLS (no spaces). This gives you extra balls, a point I feel I must make clear to the slaving, imbecilic morons that would consider using this ridiculous cheat.

THE OUTER CIRCLES OF HELL

Keep getting killed? Then play more and improve, you miserable, no good, pathetically dripping little toilet.

SIN RATING: MEDIUMSPECIFICATION: Cheats explicitly awarding unearned extra lives.AMIGA POWER'S RESPONSE: Arched eyebrows, sharply inhaled breaths and a refusal to return your telephone calls.PENANCE: Eating a bag of sugar, drinking 57 cans of Red Bull energy drink and then sitting through back-to-back screenings of Lawrence of Arabia (The Recently Restored Director's Cut), Shoah, Gone With The Wind and The Sheltering Sky WITHOUT ONCE LEAVING YOUR SEAT.Desert Strike

BQQQAEZ gives you an astonishing 10 lives, but to need that many lives you'd not only be a filthy swindler but also possibly the worst Desert Strike player in all of Christendom. We're talking about a game where you can complete all of level one without ever having to reload your guns. For heaven's sake.

Stardust

FZQQQQQXAICN gives you an astonishing 7 missiles, 26 lives and ALL the weapons from the start of level one. Why not just tell your mates that you've finished the game instead? We're sure they'd be as impressed.

Syndicate

NUK THEM reactivates all your dead cyborgs, effectively wiping out all the tension relating to building up and protecting your fearsome warriors. Go ahead, ruin the game.

THE INNER CIRCLES OF HELL

SIN RATING: HIGH

SPECIFICATION: Cheats giving infinite lives or powers.

AMIGA POWER'S RESPONSE: Daubing offensive slogans on your front door and employing some pipe-wielding, hard-hitting homeboys to get mediaeval on your ("Antonio Fargas" – Ed)

PENANCE: Paying Sicilian hitmen to break into your house at some point in the next 20 years and shampoo you in your sleep.

Syndicate

Typing in COOPER TEAM gives you the ultimate team, the best modifications and the best weapons, thus negating the entire R&D and tax-raising sections and reducing one of the best games of all time to a rather sophisticated shoot-'em-up.

The authors of Syndicate would be turning in their graves if they knew you used this one. If they were dead, of course.

Back to the Future 3

Complete levels by typing ROTTEN

CHEAT, LOUSY

CHEAT or LOW DOWN CHEAT. Disappointingly weak epithets for such scummy behaviour.

Zool 2

The password TOUGHGUY renders all of the bad guys completely harmless and the game nearly pointless. You're still vulnerable to killer walls though, which is why this slimy cheat appears here and not in the next section.

Supercars

Typing your name as RICH gives you a million pounds, allowing you to beef up your car to monstrous proportions. But why stop there? Why not use a cheat to let down your opponents' tyres? Or pour sugar into their petrol tanks? Scum.

THE NUB OF HELL

SIN RATING: UNSPEAKABLY FOUL

SPECIFICATION: Cheats bestowing invincibility or offering shortcuts to the end sequence.

AMIGA POWER'S RESPONSE: Words cannot adequately express the revulsion we feel for people who would actually consider using cheats of this diabolical power and magnitude.

PENANCE: Spending all of eternity burning in the deepest, most sulphurous pits of the underworld.

Banshee

KANNIJADE KREW makes you invincible, although what sort of imbecilic ne'er-do-well would want to play a shoot-'em-up where you can't be killed?

Hired Guns

Ditto for this one. Type in AMIGA to become invincible and spoil the game entirely. Why doncha?

Pinball Illusions

The bile rises quickly, and audibly, into my mouth at the mere thought of this cheat, so if you're a fine and upstanding member of society, prepare a large waterproof receptacle (a washing up bowl or bucket, perhaps) before reading further.

Typing DIGITAL ILLUSIONS (no space) will actually disable the drain, so the ball just bounces off the bottom of the screen. This means that you can play for ever and notch up hugely impressive scores. Impressive until your friends and family discover how you achieved this score and machine gun you in the shower, that is.

Populous 2

How's this for being totally stupid? Enter the code for the last level in the Conquest game – WOITAB – and quit. Select I AM BAD from the Custom game, quit again and start a Conquest game. Play so badly that all your men get killed and a screen will say LAND COMPLETED BY GOOD. At this point you can get all your friends to run in and watch the end-of-game sequence. While they're doing this, loudly claim that you're the sort of person who can fight your way through 1,000 levels to get to the end and not, for example, the sort of putrid melon-fudding chicken socket fridge who'd rather faff about using a cack-handed cheaty method to slither your way to the same point.

Desert Strike

And again, incredibly there's a cheat that lets you bypass THE ENTIRE GAME. Every single flipping bit of the game, each and every part of the four huge levels just flies by if you simply type in (That's enough about cheats in games. – Ed)

CHEATING ISN'T WINNING...

And that's why we'll continue to pour our scalding scorn on those blanchmange heads who phone in (usually near deadline) asking for cheats for Premier Manager 3 and Theme Park.

Do you honestly think that someone who uses an invulnerability cheat will be as happy to finish Second Samurai as someone who's battled through it? Or that a football management player who gets a million quid in a cheat would be as proud to reach the Premier Division as the upright citizen who's struggled to the top without a backhander? Or that the tosser who stole my airgun would feel as proud to own it as me – the person who earned the money to actually buy the damned thing?

Well, apart from the last one, the answer has to be no. They can't feel as good as the noble, honest, upstanding player, which is why we sound a little tired and bored when you ruin our days by phoning in to ask for cheats and why we'll continue to head The Last Resort with a word implying you're all useless.

Play the game for heaven's sake, and if you get stuck, try again. That's all there is to it.

This has been an AMIGA POWER policy statement and can be read in full in our trusty magazine manifesto, whose titanium-bound pages lie resting in a secret vault in Zurich.

We thank you for paying attention. YOU ARE DISMISSED.

THE LAND THAT FORGOT WHO WE ARE

JONATHAN DAVIES

Gentleman editor Jonathan as misunderstood war-weary Captain Helmut von Picklehauber turned away from the periscope. "It's incredible," he said, addressing his prisoners. "It seems to be a lush, tropical island unmarked on any map. Who knows what evil lurks in the heart of an jungle? Von Sydow knows," he said, gesturing at an elderly explorer. "We must go ashore," he added, rapping his teeth with a pencil. "Our supplies of allodium phosdex, the shaving cream atom, are alarmingly low."

CAM WINSTANLEY

The party moved cautiously through penetrable jungle, muted by the loss of von Sydow who had immediately fallen off the U-boat and drowned. "Intriguing," mused sinisterly suave US collaborator dep ed Cam as Masten Thrust, Richard Harris's millionaire hunter in 1975's The Last Dinosaur (it's true), halting the advance as he spotted something on the rough path ahead. "I've not seen spore like this since Burma, 1899." He closely examined the spore. "It's from no animal I've ever encountered." He straightened up, one eyebrow lifted. "And I've bagged one of every creature on this planet."

STEVE FARAGHER

"There be tracks goin' behoid this rock vurmation, zur," observed Steve the prod ed as repatriated Devonshire Prussian Midshipman Baines. He scampered forwards, tugging at his forelock, seemingly unconcerned by the way every other sailor on the boat had already fallen off a large log into a ravine. "Look out, man!" cried Colonel Thrust, pointing at a dinosaur which had reared up from behind the rock formation. "Oi 'ave no fear. Oi 'ave moi trusty sledge'ammer," retorted Baines, waving the farming implement. "Aaarghh," he added.

JONATHAN NASH

"Roooooaarrghhh!" exclaimed Jonathan as a carnivorous triceratops, worrying the hapless Midshipman between his mighty incisors. "Eeeek," squealed the grizzled old salt, strangely keeping his arms at his side as he was shaken from side to side almost in slow-motion. "Roooooaaargghhhhh!" bellowed Jonathan, dropping the chewy sailor as a tyrannosaur lumbered onto the scene. It pawed at the stunned Jack Tar. "Graaaaargghhh!" it challenged. Battle was joined.

PAUL MELLERICK

"Oh, this is pointless," said Paul as the disbelieving staff writer, as the party sheltered behind some rocks. "That's not a triceratops at all. The triceratops was a herbivore. It didn't have mighty incisors." He peered around the corner. "Look, it's just a newt with a cardboard fin on its back. And that tyrannosaur's rubber. So is Steve. He's really over there drinking some tea. I'll prove it." He stepped out of cover and was crushed to death by the struggling behemoths.

RICH PELLEY

"GREAT SCOTT!" exclaimed Rich as Professor Bonkers, peering through his spectacles. "A FINE SPECIMEN OF TRICERATOPS GIGANTICUS. I SHALL ADDRESS IT IN THE NAME OF SCIENCE." Captain Picklehauber clutched at his arm. "Don't be a fool, man. You can't reason with such a creature – it has a brain the size of a walnut." He pointed to a walnut in corroboration of his statement. The tyrannosaur leapt upon the triceratops's back as if lifted with a wire. The Professor nibbled his tieclip in a frenzy.

SARAH SHERLEY-PRICE

The tyrannosaur's mighty jaws scored the bony collar of the mighty triceratops. With a shimmy and a dip of its mighty shoulders the lapsed herbivore tossed the king of lizards into a bush. A mighty crash rang in the ears of our cowering party. The tyrannosaur sprang to its mighty feet and rushed headlong at the triceratops. "MIGHT HE WIN?" muttered the Professor. "He might," answered Captain Picklehauber. Meanwhile, Sarah had left to (eurch) have her baby.

SUE HUNTLEY

Art ed Sue, as Rose, the Professor's daughter, examined the furry bikini she had been handed. The tyrannosaur caught one in the stomach from a horn and died testily. "To hell with this," barked Sue, hurling the bikini to the ground. She snapped her sawed-off open with one hand and dumped a shell in the breech, stepped into the clearing and blasted the triceratops between the eyes. The ricochet uncovered a rich vein of allodium phosdex and set off the volcano, which destroyed the island as the party escaped to the open sea just in time for the war to end. Phew. That was close.

HOW DOES OUR SCORING SYSTEM WORK THEN?

1. We play a game until we can bear to play it no more. Then we play it a bit more just to be safe. Then we write our review ignoring all commercial pressures. Because we are your friends. Trust us.
2. The percentage scale's got 100 increments and we use them all. Crap games get single figures, average games get an average mark (50%) and only brilliant games get 90s. Unlike other mags, over 80% in AP actually means something.
3. Who cares if a game's got great graphics or nice sound if it's useless? Not us. Our reviews give a single mark based on the game as a whole.
4. We're hard but we're fair.
5. Fifth points? We'd rather be Kenneth Branagh.

Release: February

Today I was struck by a worrying thought. What if a parallel could be drawn between my life, and current theories regarding the creation of the universe? From the day of my birth (equivalent to the Big Bang) it would have increased in size rapidly, thrown outwards by the vigour of the initial explosion. Then it would gradually have begun to lose momentum, expanding more and more slowly until one day – 11th July, 1993 by my reckoning – it would have succumbed to the gravitational forces at its heart and, after pausing momentarily at its zenith, begun to collapse in on itself.

And as it shrunk smaller and smaller – and this is the really disturbing part – it would have replayed in reverse the events which took place on the way outwards. If my reasoning holds, it continues to do this as I write, until on a day 22 years from now it will have contracted to a single point of infinite density. I'm not sure what'll happen then, but I don't expect it'll be very nice.

ZEITGEIST

I was set on this path of thought by, among other things, finding myself reviewing Dawn Patrol, a year-and-a-half after 11th July, 1993. It's a World War 1 aerial combat game, in which you roam the skies of France shooting down baddies. Meanwhile, just over three years ago, a year-and-a-half before 11th July, 1993, I was reviewing Knights of the Sky, a World War 1 aerial combat game in which you roamed the baddies. Not so much déjà vu, then, as déjà review. A-ha ha.

Dawn Patrol is organised as a kind of interactive book. You click on 'page numbers' to jump to 'chapters' on various aspects of World War 1 aviation – the history of the war, the aces, the aircraft, or a selection of pilots whose careers you can follow through. From within these 'chapters' you can then choose individual pilots, or planes, or whatever, by 'turning' to the appropriate 'page'. And once on the 'page' you can read lots of text with an accompanying picture or animated sequence, and then go from there to actually flying a mission.

"Struts around their under-carriage"

It's rather a tortured analogy, especially when you find yourself typing page numbers from memory into a fiddly little box in the corner of the screen, but it's wholly preferable to the dreadful 'click on various buildings on an airbase' system of Rowan's previous game, Overlord, and it could be said to be taking the Amiga boldly forwards into a new era of interactive InfoEduTainment.

Once you're up in the air, Dawn Patrol looks much like any other Amiga flight sim. The aeroplanes are all neatly modelled, with roundels and iron crosses and little struts around their undercarriage, and there's a nice hazy effect on the horizon, but even on an A1200 it moves a bit jerkily unless you turn some of this detail off. Curiously, the sides of the screen sometimes move in and out slightly, making the picture bigger and smaller. Apparently this is to keep the speed of the graphics up, but it made me feel slightly sick.

The standard cockpit view only gives you a thin letterbox-shaped peek at the action. But that, of course, is where you can call upon Rowan's now-famous

WHAT WE WANT TO KNOW IS...

Why, back in the early days of military aviation, when all the good aeroplane names (like Phantom, Lightning, Mustang and so on) had yet to be used up, did manufacturers give their aircraft feeble titles like the Pup, the Camel and the SE5a? How might the balance of the war have been altered if the Germans, instead of calling their main frontline fighter the Albatross, had flown into battle against us in Fokker Thunderchiefs, or DR4c Soul Extinguishers? Or did they realise how inappropriate such exciting, thrusting names would have been for their underpowered, unsafe aircraft? And in that case, shouldn't those pioneering aviators have been taking to the skies in the Fokker Fliegenkoffin? The Nieuport Pagnell? Or the Sopwith Crap?

The combat lock view, then. Here we are, looking out of our cockpit, sort of down a bit and to the right, as the view tracks an Albatros which is flying across our path. Er, imagine you're turning your head to follow it, and that's what it's like.

THE MISSION

Captain Woollett, with the sun at his back, is over enemy lines in a 2 Camel force. 2 LVGs escorted by 2 Fokker Triplanes are above him. 2 minutes after the initial encounter, another 2 Fokker Triplanes appear on the scene.

Energy fire was light. Jones returned with almost no damage.

Here's a mission debriefing. They tend to be rather an anti-climax, adding to Dawn Patrol's fragmented feel.

range of special views, which were explained in detail in the review of Overlord in AP43. You can look at your own plane from all sorts of different angles. You can get views of all the enemy planes. And there's the incredibly useful combat lock, which follows the nearest baddie around the sky so you don't spend the whole time watching them whizzing across your field of view, fumbling for the 'left' and 'right' view keys as you manoeuvre.

FREUDENSCHAFT

If it's realism you're after, then there's lots. Switch off the Super Engines option and your plane claws feebly at the air, just like a biplane should. Try too many turny-twisty manoeuvres and your wings will fall off. (Although this actually gets a bit annoying, because you've no real way of knowing when you're exceeding your plane's limits.

Cam pointed out that, in a real plane, you'd be able to feel the g-force, and see your wings juddering about and the ground looming up to meet you, and suggested that maybe the screen should wobble about when you're pushing the plane too hard.) Also, your guns occasionally jam, causing you to have to level out and stab repeatedly at the U key till they clear. (Although it's actually more 'quite often' than 'occasionally', and again gets annoying. Maybe gun-jamming is the flight sim equivalent of reversing-the-controls power-ups in platform games.)

There are 13 aeroplanes to choose from, from the desperately inadequate DH2 to the nimble Fokker Triplane, along with some Gotha bombers which you can't fly. And the missions are pretty varied too – as well as attacking formations of baddies you've got to escort bombers, attack barrage balloons and strafe lorries. You can also 'be' a wide variety of top aces, like Immelman, Ball and Richthofen, although in practice this means doing exactly the same sort of missions you'd be doing if you were Smith, Jones or, indeed, Davies, but with a bit of historical preamble beforehand. Except, having said that, the ace's missions are based on historical accounts, and you even get the chance to re-enact Richthofen's final, fateful flight to see if you can succeed where he failed.

Perhaps it's unfair to directly compare Dawn Patrol with Knights Of The Sky simply because they're both 3D polygon World War 1 flight sims.

Farewell, Red Baron.

Aaarghh. Curse this joystick.

Oh – I'm that one, am I?

What? Has it started already?

What Goodyear blimp?

Oh no. The keyboard was upside-down.

Oh, that flight simulator.

That was just a pratice go.

SASSEN RASSEN FRASSEN

But they do both do essentially the same job and the question has to be asked: Is Dawn Patrol significantly better than Microprose's three-year-old veteran, which is still ranked at No 7 in our All-Time Top 100?

LEBENSRAUM

Dawn Patrol certainly has advantages over Knights Of The Sky: slightly more sophisticated graphics, the option to fly for the Germans and a greater variety of viewing angles, for example. It also comes in a huge box with an excellent illustrated book about the Red Baron and a manual stuffed with fascinating facts. (Apparently, during the Battle of Cambrai in November 1917, 30% of pilots were lost per day. Blimey.)

And it excels in the way the computer-controlled aircraft behave. If you spy a formation of enemy planes below, and the sun is behind you, you really do have surprise on your side. The computer planes won't be aware of you until you start shooting at them, by which time it'll hopefully be too late. And rather than stubbornly sticking with dogfights until either you or they are dead, they'll realise when they're losing and flee, leaving you either to chase after them or to give up.

But Knights Of The Sky is still after all this time, so much more atmospheric and exciting. It opens with some flickery, black-and-white credits and a tinkly piano tune. Then, after negotiating the menus, you find yourself sitting on your airstrip with friendly planes circling overhead and lorries driving up and down the road. (Dawn Patrol's missions all start in the air, and you're never really aware of what's happening below.) You start up your engine with a satisfying splutter and lurch along the runway, clawing your way into the air just before you run out of grass. Then, after a short flight, you're over enemy lines, the air thick with Fokkers and flak bursts. Messages appear on the screen like "Bullets whistle through the air around you!" and "Gun jam cleared!", which add greatly to the tension. The ground is littered with buildings, trees, guns and trucks, which not only provide a better sense of altitude, but give you something to skim over as you attempt to evade pursuit. There's even that fantastic two-player serial link option. Knights might not be as realistic as Dawn Patrol – the number of planes and ground targets has been exaggerated so there's more to occupy you, and dogfights tend to follow repetitive patterns – but its shoot-'em-uppy feel means it works much better as a game.

VOLKSWAGEN

Dawn Patrol, on the other hand, is slick and worthy, and in most respects a fine product, but just a trifle dull. Each mission is carefully staged and happens exactly as planned, so you're never surprised by anything. In fact, ironically, you never actually get to 'patrol' at all. You're never just sent up on the off-chance of running into some baddies, as tended to happen in World War 1. And it doesn't really conjure up that pioneering, barn-storming spirit that's one of the big advantages of a good World War 1 flight sim: although your wings fall off occasionally, you feel almost as insulated as you do in, say, an F-117A Stealth Fighter.

Overlord was good because, apart from perhaps Reach For The Skies, it's got no serious competition in the World War 2 flight sim stakes. And you could launch rocket attacks on boats and factories. But Dawn Patrol is slap bang up against Knights Of The Sky and, although Dawn Patrol's got plenty going for it, it's Knights that we always reach for.

Some early aircraft designs were particularly eccentric.

What's bothering me now is that, if my life really is replaying itself in reverse, then it's clearly slightly worse on the way back. So this summer, although I was planning to go to California, I'd better brace myself for the most appalling holiday in Wales on record.

SEE! TRY! BUY!

Dawn Patrol is organised as an InTerAcTive MultiMedia book, with everything divided up into chapters and pages. But how, you might be wondering, does this work in practice? Allow the AMIGA POWER™ InfoCannon® to tear through the blinding fog of your ignorance with its thunderous ejaculations.

THE AIRCRAFT: Aeroplanes evolved rapidly during the war. The first few were quite dreadful (the Wright brothers had only made the first powered flight 11 years earlier), but they slowly improved until they were merely crap. Dawn Patrol gives you 13 to choose from, with information about each.

HISTORY: 'Turning' to 'page' 'B' from the 'index' elicits a series of periods from the war, stretching from those first tentative encounters to the eventual demise of the German air force. 'Turning' to one of these gives you some text to read and a choice of missions from that period to fly.

THE ACES: The best pilots shot down loads of planes, and by 'turning' to this 'page' you'll be able to read about the Red Baron, Albert Ball, Eddie Rickenbacker and their chums. Then you can fly some of the missions they flew. Each time you complete one you'll be offered another. This is probably the most involving way to play Dawn Patrol.

PILOT BIOGRAPHIES: Dawn Patrol falls down a bit when it comes to creating your own pilots. The nearest you get is this 'page' where there are eight fictional pilots. Unfortunately you can't change their names or anything about them, and you're simply given a list of missions to choose from for each one. Desperately limp.

UPPERS Incredibly realistic behaviour on the part of the computer-controlled aircraft. A wide variety of planes to fly. Detailed graphics. Good viewing options. A novel 'EduInfoTainment' approach which gives you plenty of interesting stuff to read. Speaking of stuff to read, the Red Baron book is great. And biplanes always make for the most enjoyable flight sims.

DOWNERS Not much action on the ground, although there are allegedly a few trucks knocking around. Or scenery. No two-player facility. A slightly fragmented feel, what with all the various routes into the action. Poor sound effects. A distinct lack of World War 1 atmosphere.

THE BOTTOM LINE

A comprehensive WW1 flight sim which stretches the Amiga about as far as it's likely to go polygon-wise, and which is wrapped up neatly as an interactive educational experience (or something). But ultimately it falls a little short of Knights Of The Sky in the atmosphere and excitement stakes.

80 PERCENT

FLINK

Runs on: CD32

Publisher: Psygnosis

Authors: Erwin Kloibhofer (programming), Henk Nieborg (graphics) and Matthias Steinwachs (music)

Price: £20

Release: Out now

The nincompoops. They've clearly sweated over Flink for months. The graphics are delightful – Psygnosis at their best, with pretty scenery and lovingly animated characters. (We were particularly amused by the expression of terror on Flink's face as he runs out of control down really steep hills). It's packed with ideas. Not all of them are successful, and most are simply plundered from other games, but at least there are some. The spell-casting system adds an extra dimension, for example, and you can pick up stunned baddies and hurl them at other baddies, as with the Koopas in Super Mario World. The music is, sadly, from the beat-box of Beelzebub (Steve's line), but that is only to be expected. There are some cracking end-of-world bosses. And there are loads of secret bits to discover. Basically, a determined effort has been made to create something special, something that can be sold to you, the game-buying public, without the crisis of conscience which must surely accompany the release of so many platform games.

WIZARD

Why, then, does Flink, your character, react to the controls like a cretin? When you press left or right he walks forward arthritically slowly for a few seconds before suddenly lurching up to speed, frequently plummeting from the platform to his death or crashing into a monster. A child of three could spot how feeble an attempt to simulate inertia this is, so why did it escape Psygnosis's team of playtesters? Furthermore, Flink has a frustrating tendency to slip through the edges of platforms when he should clearly have

Mmm. Giant satsumas. Genetic engineering research continue, so that we may taste them in real life.

Neither of these flaws is enough to seriously compromise the game, and you do almost become blind to them eventually, but to take so much care over everything else while messing up something as fundamental and straightforward as the way your character walks about is criminal.

Flink begins, innovatively, in a Forest World™. You run along from left to right, kill some baddies using the erratic and much-hated (by me) but traditional jumping-on-their-heads system, and collect power-ups, and that's largely it. But things soon liven up with the arrival of fire-breathing monsters, rotating platform-wheels, showers of falling leaves which you've got to jump about on, and forced-scrolling levels (more of which later).

SORCERER

There are some mildly entertaining puzzles, too, involving dropping rocks on see-saws to catapult yourself into the air, and tossing other rocks onto platforms so that the weight causes them to sink to within reach. And later there's a tremendously exciting bit where you've got to try to escape from a herd of stampeding boars by heaving yet more rocks into their path. Flink hardly heralds the arrival of a brave new era of platform game technology, but at least it makes the effort, and it's never dull.

It's also tautly structured. There are four worlds, each divided into several levels. These are further chopped up into short sub-levels, with the result that no one section lasts for more than a minute or two. And, as there are plenty of baddies all over the place, the game feels pacy and action-packed.

Further examples of inept design do rear their distasteful heads, though. Those forced-scrolling levels, for example. The idea of forced scrolling is to keep you moving, to make you think fast, to deny you the chance to stand around getting your breath back. Flink, however, uses it to slow your progress. You jump onto a platform and find it sinking into the water beneath your feet. If you don't jump off quickly, you'll die. Except there's nothing to jump onto because the next platform hasn't scrolled onto the screen yet. You were, in fact, supposed to wait for it to do so before jumping onto the first platform. Ridiculous.

Even worse are the occasional bits where you'll see a barrel floating temptingly in the water. The waves are making it bob up and down – so much so, in fact, that it keeps disappearing off the bottom of the screen and reappearing again. So you jump onto it. But – oh no – as soon as the barrel disappears off the screen and your character follows it across the level's arbitrarily-chosen cut-off point, you die. Preposterous.

WARLOCK

But Flink rallies bravely with lots of nice bits. The bosses look excellent, with special CD32 rotating bits, although they're rather routine to actually kill, and one of them makes the scrolling slow down to a judder. I was deeply touched by the baddies who run around with bags on their backs with spell ingredients poking out of them, which is much nicer than having it simply appear from nowhere.

The continues system seems just about right, too. There are no passwords, but you can choose between three or five continues, or practice mode. In the case of the latter you can continue as many times as you want, but you won't be able to tackle the final boss and complete the game. What this does

"Some cracking end-of-world"

THE SPELL OF NAPALM IN THE MORNING

Like 90% of all game characters, Flink is an apprentice wizard. This means he can mix up ingredients to make spells, of which there are about nine. (All right, exactly nine.) These will then assist him in various ways.

Having collected the ingredients (which are scattered around on the floor), you've got to mix them up. This is all a bit obvious. Sorry.

And there we are. Grabbed with pinpoint accuracy, our lightning bolt invokes fearsome retribution upon all baddies in the locality.

Then, pop it into your spell book to use at a later date. We've only mixed one spell here, but we could have mixed up, for example, two.

mean, though, is that if you want to play the game through to the end you'll have to do it in one sitting – a save facility might have been slightly more convenient.

It's fun, then. But how long will it last? Hmm. I wouldn't really like to say. Although it's big, it's not all that hard (and not particularly clever), and I'd seen pretty much the whole thing by the end of my first day's play. What's more, I was getting ever so slightly bored of jumping around the Tree World, and having apples fall on my head. And the controls were starting to get on my nerves again. And 98% of it we've already seen elsewhere. (Just wait till you get to the Runaway Mine Cart™ level. No, really.)

Flink's good, then. But there are annoying bits. And it's not very original. And it's not entirely clear why it'll only work on the CD32.

● JONATHAN DAVIES

UPPERS Desperately beautiful. Smooth animation. Packed with stuff, even if most of it has been rehashed from other games. Generally highly entertaining.

DOWNERS Despicable controls, and a couple of entirely original and immensely irritating blunders. Oh, and an incredibly obscure bug which corrupts the screen if you change from 60 to 50Hz mode while in the menus.

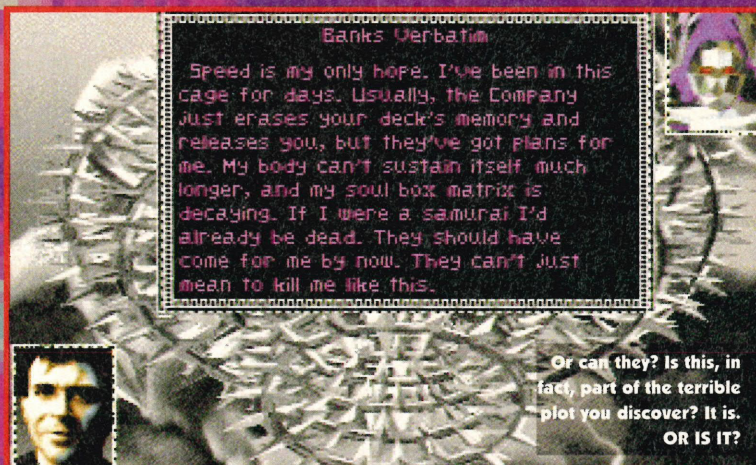

THE BOTTOM LINE

If you lined up all the platform games in the world in order of merit – against a wall – Flink would be in the top 10% of them.

gruesome mechanical fault would lurch from the wings to cancel it out. Tragedy loomed like some doom in a room as a week or so of sternly attentive play left me wallowing miserably in that flat, indecisive state. But then, a religious experience.

CUSHION

Bloodnet (the everyday tale of a vampiric 'cyberpunk') is a phenomenally complex point-and-click adventure. Far phenomenallier than is needed, in fact, with a CONTROL METHOD OF ASMODOE that uses both mouse buttons in an unhelpful manner and a doorstop manual of essential reading. You can 'recruit' characters to your 'party' and 'jack' into 'the matrix'. Statistics make a fulsome appearance, as do 'character generation' and (eek) 'hit points'.

The game has a terrible, terrible beginning as you struggle with the controls. Picking up an object is a three-stage affair: first, you double-click on it with the right button to bring up a description of the object; then you single-click on it with the right button to put it in your hand; then you turn your character to face out of the screen and single-click on him with the left button to make him put it in his inventory.

The idea is that, with the object in your hand, you can switch to another

There used to be a computer magazine called Ace. As every computer magazine has to have a gimmick – AMIGA POWER's, for example, being that we always tell the truth about games – Ace had a farcical scoring system. Each game reviewed by Ace received not only a mark out of a thousand, but also a gently or steeply curving line predicting how your interest in the game would be retained over time. Nonsense, of course, as the reviewers clearly hadn't been playing the game for three months (or whatever).

Anyway, the point is while playing Bloodnet I've been mentally plotting my own 'lasting interest' curve and it looks like a row of spikes on a tachycardiac sugar-fiend's electrocardiograph machine. Not since Elite has there been such a nettling mixture of the buzzingly terrific and crashingly poor. No sooner would an intriguing plot twist pop into view than a 'sheet' and, say, put it in your computer unit, give it to another person in your group or 'use' it with something. But you can do all this much more easily from the all-in-one inventory screen. Worse, because you have to double-click to examine an object, it's all too easy to get it accidentally – a fatal error if you're in a room with someone on guard.

Practice helps, of course, but you'll still fume over having to pick everything up one object at a time and then switch to the inventory screen, scrolling through lists of unlabelled icons in order to pass the objects to the appropriate character because the members of your party can't get things directly. You should at least be able to specify into whose inventory objects are put by default.

And, heck, while we're on the subject of clumsiness, although you don't have to walk around the location to pick up objects or talk to people – the game takes the sensible view that you can reach everything and you can switch directly to the city map in order to travel around – you do have to manoeuvre your character through doors if there's an adjacent room and this is appallingly and unnecessarily fiddly.

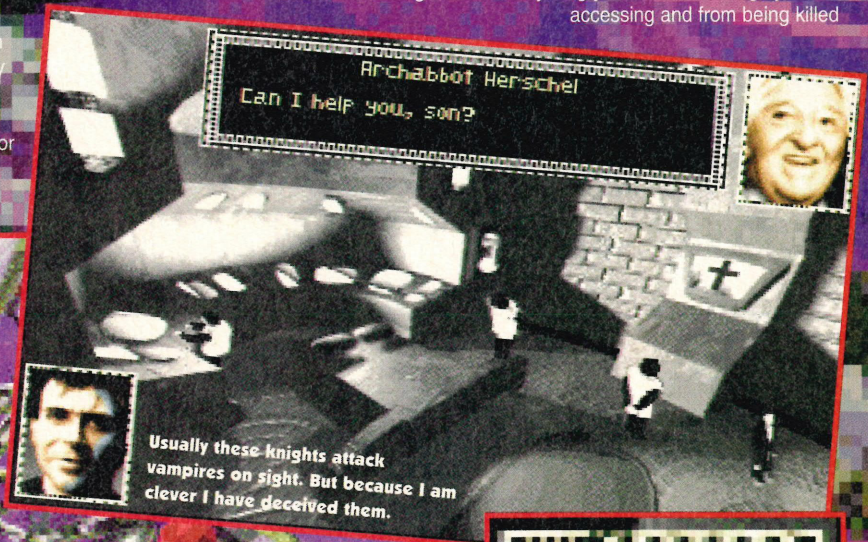

Again, if someone attacks you (sometimes if you just talk to them, or walk into the same room as them), you're only given the option to run away after you've meticulously placed your companions in fighting positions. And, cheaply, in fights everyone's represented by the same sprite so you can't easily see who's shooting whom. And even if you've already talked to them, you don't get any indication of who the characters are on the screen until you commit to talking to

to being asked to insert a save game disk takes 17 swaps.

And you don't get to talk to people, you just get fed lines and occasionally answer yes or no to a question. And there are minor bugs, like people chatting about people you haven't met yet as if you have, or tattling about people you've just shot in front of them without apparently having noticed you've just shot them. In front of. Them. Brrrr.

PRIZE

Such are the faults of Bloodnet, skidding maliciously beneath the hammer of kindly indulgence like the hamster in the underfelt of life. It took me the week or so of attentive playing to realise I didn't care about them at all because I was having far too much fun.

Being a bit of a point-and-click player, I've come to loathe their addled Saxinraxin-Raxinfraxin plots (off which hang lots of obvious puzzles for no reason other than point-and-click games have to have lots of them and they have to be obvious), their plastic characters (often existing solely to blurt out a vital clue before dropping dead) and their crass storytelling (clearly planned without a writer in sight). Bloodnet's story is a zinger. On the streets of 21st Century Manhattan vampires are quite at home, picking off the underclass and concealing themselves from the neuromediaeval knights of vengeance by setting up richboy clubs for bored necrophytes.

Meanwhile, revolutionary students are plotting to free the world's computers from the proprietary grasp of a sinister multi-national corporation, people are being bumped off in 'cyberspace' and in trying to find someone who can reverse the slow vamp conversion you're undergoing you uncover a plot of terrible proportions that only a cockroach embittered by a life of pitiable uselessness would reveal to you. Isn't that fantastic? A tremendously involving, immaculately-scripted story that fizzles with ideas, populated with characters who never ring false, stocked with sly, satisfying puzzles that don't leave you trying combinations of everything you're carrying in befuddlement AND NARY AN ORC IN SIGHT.

Even more refreshingly it's all non-linear, letting you follow up leads and explore the city- and 'cyber-scape in any old order and leaving it to you to tie up your findings. (I myself continue to err on the side of caution, not yet taking up a number of hackers on their eager offers to rampage through 'cyberspace', but for the moment retaining my hardboke hit squad to make sure of any opposition.) And the game's cheerfully amoral.

There's a bit, for instance, where you find out a gang is being hired by the villain to rub you out, but is willing instead to work for you if you come up with their fee first. Cunningly, however, it's just as easy to storm into their hideout and massacre them before they get a chance to be a nuisance because shooting someone carries no penalty beyond perhaps stinging their friends into reprisals. (A word here about the scraps themselves: although everything's governed by 'target acquirement', 'character statistics' and those (eek) 'hit points', you can thankfully turn them all off and tell everyone to act on their own initiative, sit back and watch the exchange of fire in hopeful terror.)

PIN

A major plot-point of the game concerns synthesising dangerous high-tech drugs to help your party in fights or in 'cyberspace' (or to sell for a tidy profit) and, most entertainingly, as a half-vamp you're forced periodically to kill for blood, the nebulous 'innocence' of your victim determining how much you lose of your precious humanity. Truly, Bloodnet is a game where you are in control. AS IT SHOULD BE. (It's also luxuriously large; after that week or so of attentive play, at a guess I'm a little over halfway through the game, still visiting new locations and still returning to old ones armed with extra information to make sense of the rum goings-on. Although, of course, the non-linearity makes it splendidly difficult to establish how far I am from success.)

Point-and-click games are in the vast majority an insolently poor bunch. Bloodnet joins with ease the pantheon of greats, jostling Beneath a Steel Sky and Nippon Sates to appear in the class photo beside the Monkey Islands. It's beautiful.

Die, innocent vampire groupie. PERISH TO FEED THE MONSTER OF MY SOUL.

UPPERS

Great plot. Tremendous storytelling. Good dialogue as well – the characters are neatly delineated. You don't have to search for objects or walk over to people to talk to them. Crafty puzzles that stem from the story. Refreshingly grim and amoral. 'Dialogue replay' means you can refer back to any conversation (typically consistent with the game logic – it's thanks to the 'neural implant' that's keeping you from becoming a full vamp). It's non-linear. It has the line "Ram it, Stark – I got Chinese to debug" in it.

DOWNERS

You need a hard drive and 2Mb of memory; playing from floppy is unthinkable as the game has 12 disks and accesses at least two every time you do the slightest thing. Learning to use the bafflingly over-complex controls is a maddening hurdle. You can get killed (but only in a fair fight). Exits from a room are poorly labelled, and walking your character through them is cursedly tricky. Music from Danny Elfman's bin.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Clever, well-scripted, thoroughly engrossing adventure THAT IS FUN. Buy a hard drive, take the trouble to conquer the controls and be rewarded with easily the best point-and-clicker of the last three years. I haven't had so much fun since first playing Monkey Island and I'm determined to complete it. It really is that good.

At the magic words "four-player", AMIGA POWER stopped. Keyboards fell silent. Joysticks clattered to the floor. Even Steve's Roger Whittaker tape came to an end, knowing somehow. There was a pause. And then we sprinted into position around the Amiga, seamlessly falling into formation – Jonathan and Steve in front on the keyboard, and Cam and me behind with joysticks. And We Had Fun.

Base Jumpers is based on a truly fantastic idea. You start off inside a tower, on the bottom floor. And you've got to sprint madly to the top. The screen scrolls to follow the leader, with anyone who falls off the bottom losing points. In the way are baddies, tricky arrangements of platforms, guns, force-fields, trampolines and so on. And the first person to reach the top gets a bonus.

'CHUTE

And then – then – you all jump off the roof. As you freefall down you can attempt to jostle each other into flagpoles and things sticking out from the building. Anyone unfortunate enough to hit one goes 'splat', and bits of him tumble down the screen. Then everyone starts to get tense as the ground approaches. You see, the last person to pull their ripcord lands first, and gets a bonus. But leave it too late and the results are terribly unpleasant.

We loved it, inevitably. The alternating mad scrambles to the tops of the towers and tense descents make a perfect mixture, and the proliferation of dismembered bodies made us chuckle disturbingly. And, following the success of the druids and UFOs in Jetstrike, Rasputin have let rip with a devastating range of secret bits and bonus things. By collecting letters in the right order as you run around, you can gain access to "at least 11" bonus games – things like Joust, Kung Fu, an excellent four-player variation on Breakout, and a curious Invisible Space Invaders.

The graphics, meanwhile, are cheery and colourful, if a little sloppily animated and the sound effects are entirely appropriate.

STRAPS

But Base Jumpers is flawed. It just doesn't work at all as a one-player game – it's a bit like going bungee jumping with no-one watching to see how brave you are. And you run out of lives too quickly in multi-player games. Pretty soon there's only one player left, and he's not going to want to continue on his own after he knows he's won.

"Sticking out from the building"

And despite all the bonus bits and pieces packed into it, it feels too flimsy to justify the £26 being asked.

So although Base Jumpers filled our hearts with joy for a couple of hours, pretty soon we were beginning to get disgruntled. We liked it a lot, and it's made us laugh more than any other game this month, and there are secret recesses of it that we've yet to explore. But it's not a game we'll be returning to all that often.

UPPERS The idea of running as fast as possible to the top of a tall building and jumping off it is remarkably appealing. The attention to detail marks it out as the work of somebody who Cares About Games, which is a rare thing these days. There is a pleasing sprinkling of the macabre.

DOWNERS It's not structured to take full advantage of its multi-player potential, and doesn't stand up as a one-player game. It's also too expensive, to be honest.

DEATH MASK

Doom on the Amiga. Or is it? Or IS it? OR IS IT? Not really, no.

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200, CD32

Publisher: Alternative

Authors: Apache

Price: £30 (CD32), £26 (floppy)

Release: Out now

Normally I don't get much time to review games, stretched to nervous breaking point as I am through trying to force the endemically lazy AMIGA POWER to hit deadlines, so it was a bit of a luxury to come back after the Christmas break and have plenty of time to sit around and play a game I've been looking forward to.

Death Mask is the first of the Doom-style games that we've been speculating about (very idly) in this mag for some time. For those of you who emulate the bears and hibernate all winter, thereby missing our erudite meditations, Doom is a game that has 'revolutionised' PC gaming. This is more than a little surprising when you consider that it's essentially a 3D maze with ultra-violence (time was that '3D maze' was a phrase associated with PD programmers of the most limited imagination). Still, no matter, the PC game is revolutionised and by the sort of 'trickle-down' effect so favoured by '80s Conservative politicians, so shall the Amiga game also be revolutionised. Probably.

Death Mask can be played two ways. The first presents you with 32 levels of 3D maze fun that can be played by one or two players. Some levels require only that you find the exit and leave, some demand that you kill all the opposition before you can leave, and sometimes you have to find or destroy an object. The rationale for all this mindless mayhem is some baloney about it being the year 9030, you being hybrid rat/men with daft names (and shotguns, natch) and the aliens coming. Oh dear.

The second way of playing Death Mask is competitively, player against player, over any one of ten specially designed levels.

The controls are effective enough on the CD32 with the shoulder buttons swivelling you around and the joystick moving you left, right, forward and back but keeping you facing the same way. The red button is fire and the yellow brings up the map. Moving around is confusing at first, but, with time, the controls became instinctive.

Death Mask is a poor man's Doom. Its 3D maze is all a bit of a trick, given away by the square-by-square movement of the characters. No smoothly-moving, virtual 3D environments here. Instead we get step-by-step redrawing of the calculated position and viewpoint of each player which gives an artificial feel to the game. It also means that all the levels are designed square by square (or, in fact, to give DM its full credit, half-square by half-square) and this does make everything look the same. There are plenty of different wall textures on different levels, but it's difficult to tell where you are on any particular level without the help of the map. In fairness, Apache have named

"Which is a shame"

I CAN SEE HIM BUT...

One of the truly annoying things about Death Mask is that poor game design has led to inconsistencies in its internal logic. Take the following examples...

Mini automatics are like Uzis and fun but the Medegun is THE BEST GUN IN AN AMIGA GAME EVER with its high fire rate, great sound effects and the beautiful way it spins to a stop.

There are two kinds of things in Death Mask: Good Things and Bad Things. The Good Things are almost all guns and the Bad Things are all monsters. Learn to recognise them with the aid of this handy guide...

Aliens are ugly and reasonably hard.

These strange creatures shoot plasma bolts.

Ninja, ninja, on the wall, who's the bloodiest of them all?

Ever wondered what 91st Century shotguns would look like? Me neither. The Blaster's useless as well. Tch.

I can see him, but...oh, sorry, wrong box.

Robot vs shotgun? Robot every time. You lose.

In the two player mode (right) you can recreate your favourite moments from Quentin Tarrantino movies.

Guys in leather jackets are pushovers. In real life too.

Hello, it's a Marine. What's he doing in the 91st Century?

If the worst comes to the worst...give up. Start again before attempting to stab killer robots to death.

UPPERS The best gun in an Amiga game ever. Enjoyment. Action. Two-player game.

DOWNERS Not enough levels. Annoying graph paper design. Silly plot. Everybody else found the controls frustrating, although I didn't mind them at all.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Death Mask is undeniably fun and benefits from a two-player element but it took me only five hours to complete the game and that's inexcusable, especially with a CD game. The player vs player option is nowhere near as exciting as it should be.

69 PERCENT

HEROES AND VILLAINS

some areas on each level so that a little message comes up saying 'supply room' or whatever, but this is a poor substitute and you're left with the feeling that you're playing a computer game rather than wandering around a distant planet in the far future. You just don't feel like you 'are' there. Which is a shame. The plus, and presumably the reason that Death Mask has been set up this way, is that it runs smoothly and quickly. No matter how complicated the level, no matter how many monsters are on-screen, the action never slows down. In fact the only noticeable pauses are when the next chunk of (surprisingly pleasant) background music loads from the CD.

YOU'RE DEAD

Death Mask is particularly disappointing in the player vs player game, which should be the best part. There's nothing to beat the tense excitement of player-on-player action: hiding around corners trying to tell the location of the other player by his footsteps; rushing headlong across open spaces while firing off bursts of machine gun fire; laying ambushes; exchanging snapshots when your ammo runs low; and so on. Unfortunately, in Death Mask the excitement is marred by the lack of meaningful sounds; the uncertainty of where you are; the over abundance of (yes!) regenerating ammunition; and the fact that you can see where your opponent is on your map (and that consequently he can see where you are on your map as well just by looking at your half of the screen). Every competitive game I played ended with the protagonists standing toe-to-toe and shooting it out. Dull.

The other big problem that the game faces is that it's just too easy. With the aid of Jonathans both Nash and Davies, I completed the 32 levels in just over five hours on the first day of trying. Only three levels caused enough of a problem to make us start them again, so we effectively played straight through them.

What there is of the game is entertaining enough, with plenty of atmosphere and some well designed levels. However, Death Mask just isn't well enough thought out or frankly big enough to justify its price.

● STEVE FARAGHER

If there're two of you, you can gang-up on ultra-tough killer robots. Luckily.

Wading knee-deep through gore is one of the game's strong points.

THE BOTTOM LINE

It works just as well on the A1200. The only thing missing is the large selection of music tracks and a couple of levels. Unfortunately the floppy version doesn't recognise a CD32 joystick and control with a joystick is infuriating. You really need to be able to move around in Death Mask while maintaining the same facing and although you can simulate this by moving diagonally forward or backward, it's much more awkward.

Now I don't know about you, but I really like forced 3D perspective. In fact, I'd go so far as to say it's the best view you can get in any game. Just imagine something like Sensible Soccer in glorious loads-of-colour-3D-vision. It would be fab. (You could call it FIFA Soccer, or something. — Ed) And if someone did a shoot-'em-up in this forced 3D perspective that would be equally fab, because if there's one thing I love more than a shoot-'em-up it's another one. Yes. A shoot-'em-up, viewed from that forced 3D perspective. That would be good. Oh look, there's one.

I've been looking forward to Skeleton Krew since it was first previewed last April. "There's a big range of special weapons and equipment", "one of the team has worked as a comic artist" and "the Slice ("And" — Ed) Dice Trunkator promises to cut the enemy in half at waist height and blow the sections into a thousand flaming pieces while the F-Flenser tears the flesh from the bodies of your enemies" were just some of the attractive phrases used by 'K'hris Lloyd in his hilarious K-for-C 'concept' piece. The game was mentioned in the same breath as Smash TV and Es'k'ape From the Planet of the Robot Monsters and, in fact, previewed opposite the same company's spectacular 1943 clone Banshee.

And now, at last, here it is.

KOUPON

But let's not get ahead of ourselves. In atypically tolerant AMIGA POWER fashion, there's a plot to describe first. It's the year 2062, and there is an evil bloke by the name of 'K'adaver at large. There are three members of the Skeleton 'K'rew named Rib, Joint and Spine (and not Knuckle, which seems the obvious choice) who must stop him. Rubbish of course but a good excuse for Core to do what they do best — make lovely-looking, atmospheric games. There's a little comic book at the front of the manual, and the chunky art is carried over into the animation and backgrounds. It's a refreshing graphic style — distinctly different without being too over-the-top — and I like it. The impressive atmosphere is further enhanced by the contrast between the levels in aliens and bad guys and things.

So. Good graphics, then. But that's about the only thing the game has going for it. Each of the six levels (spread over four worlds — Earth, Venus, Mars and — tchah — the Psy'kogenesis Planet) sprawls all over the place, but there's a defined route

"Call it FIFA Soccer or something"

Cosmic pool.

Confusion reigns, as loads of steps appear and confuse you. Lots.

That's the trouble with cosmic pool. Aliens on the table.

for you to follow. Exploration is limited to coming across the odd secret room or two. There are no extra weapons, 'different' things to do, or 'wrong' ways to go, and without this variety the simple blasting becomes tedious.

If a shoot-'em-up is going to work, for want of a better description it's got to tap into certain emotions. You have to have danger. Action. Excitement. Uncertainty. Unpredictability. How about an absurd number of outrageous and spectacular weapons? (This is supposed to be 2062, remember.) What about adding vehicles for those really difficult parts of the level? You could even give the player the opportunity to wander around a bit, not necessarily going in the right direction, but at least giving them a chance to roam. You should certainly give the monsters a bit of venom, as in Skeleton Krew they seem just to go through the motions rather than actively attacking you. It's actually much easier to run around them than get into a fight. Even the two-player mode, which should have saved the game, just ends up doubling the frustration. It's dull, and the only element of competition comes when you see a pile of 'kash lying on the floor and both race to loot as much as you can.

Individually, these problems with Skeleton Krew are minor. Collectively they severely restrict the amount of fun and excitement to be had. It's by no means a bad game to play but it is badly designed, and when Core can do something as anarchic and fun as Banshee and have had the game in development for almost a year, we expect a lot more than what Skeleton Krew has to offer.

● PAUL MELLERICK

You know how there are certain types of games that you like playing? Some people like shoot-'em-ups and some like platform games. Well, personally I'm a bit of a sports fan. It's probably got something to do with me being merely okay-ish at most sports in real life, and yet actually quite good at them in their digitised form. Football, tennis, American football, rugby, boxing, table tennis, tennis bowling... you name it, I can play it. One sport that hasn't really got it right, though, is cricket. Graham Gooch's Cricket is the only one worth playing, but even that's flawed to frustration. And so, even though I'd heard nothing about It's Cricket until today, I was excited nonetheless. I suppose I should've known better, really.

As most of you know, there are three main parts to playing cricket. There's the batting, the bowling and, of course, the fielding.

From here you've got a couple of options to choose from. (Bowling is controlled by the mouse.) Firstly, do you want to come over or around the wicket? And secondly, what type of ball you're going to bowl. Once that's done, you flip to the batsman and position a small target on the ground which is where the ball will end up. Now the batting...

BATTING

You can see where the ball is going to land, and know you've got to decide on your shot. There are twelve shots available to you: four for the different positions of the joystick (up, down, left or right) and three different sets of shots for each time you press the fire button. Press the fire button three times and then press down for a straight drive, or just press it once and right for a leg glance. Initially you'll have problems remembering which shot is which, but repetition will soon remedy that situation. With any luck, and some skill, you'll hit the ball and send it out into the field...

"One style that works almost all the time"

FIELDING

The ball is on its way. You can see it moving. All you've got to do now is stop it. Pick a player and then select a position on the field to move him to. It's best if you move him to where the ball is. And then throw the ball at the wicket, either to stop play or try to run out a batsman.

And so that's the game. Explained. But how does it play? Here's another breakdown of how those various parts work...

Well, the bowling is fine. It's just rather dull. I spent ages trying to get people out, eventually finding one style that works almost all the time. In fact, out of ten wickets, nine of them were stumped by the wicketkeeper. A bit more variety in the style of batsmen, and the odd mistake, would make it so much better. And speaking of batsmen, batting is great fun. The shot selection bit does take quite a while to perfect, but once you've sussed out how to control it, you can do some really nice shots.

But there's no real point to all of this because of the one major flaw in the game: the fielding. It's crap, frankly. Selecting a player, and then moving him without knowing where the ball is going to stop just takes too much time, is too random and gives your opponent (computer or human) too much of an advantage as you fumble with the controls. And when the computer fields, it automatically knows where the ball is going to be, and doesn't have to worry about all this clicking on a player, clicking on where it wants him to run to and clicking on the wicket.

So what conclusions can we draw from this? Well, it's the familiar story of okay bits mixed up with dodgy bits. The graphics are cool (except for the Football Manager-style fielding) and the sampled speech is equally good with lots of examples, and there is a strong cricketing atmosphere. But the poorly-handled fielding just kind of puts you off the whole thing. Damn. And I really wanted to like this as well.

• PAUL MELLERICK

UPPERS The batting is ace – you can really put some nice shots together and play defensively when you want to. There are plenty of stats and things, and you can enter your own details into the game.

DOWNERS The bowling isn't up to much, and the fielding is truly dreadful. The unfair advantage it gives to the batting side is unforgivable.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Fielding may only be a third of the game, but it really does detract from what could have been an enjoyable game. This is a little bit better than Graham Gooch, but still only for die-hard cricket fans.

Yes please. Armour Geddon 2 (AP37, 57%) for ten pounds? Umm, maybe not, eh?

Amid this landslide of back catalogue stuff comes a new game, X-It, which used to be called (ugh) Zonked! and is so obscure a title, that when I got stuck and phoned up the Psygnosis help line (051 709 5755 – Phone them, not us, for pity's sake. – Ed), the guy denied the existence of the game and then went on to say that even if it has been released, it certainly wasn't one of theirs. Well it does, and it is.

And we've seen it before. Check back to AMIGA POWER 37, and on the second disk you'll see a PD game called Soko

Ban. In it, you're presented with some coloured blocks and floor tiles.

Against the clock, you push the blocks around until each block is on top of the corresponding coloured tile, making sure you don't push the blocks into corners where you can't move them – my point to all this being, see that Soko Ban? That's X-It, that is.

SOCKO BOFFO

Weeeeell, it is and it isn't, for although the basic idea's exactly the same, X-It's far cleverer and feature-packeder than Soko

Ban. This time you don't have to push blocks onto coloured tiles, you have to push them into holes so you can get to the exit. As well as singles some blocks are stacked on top of each other, the catch being (this is after all a puzzle game) that you can only push two at a time. These could be two single blocks, or a single stack of two but certainly not the stacks of three, which can only be moved by attaching wheels to them. And then once you've got them going, icy patches send them slithering off, or ice blocks melt before you need them or you have to teleport somewhere first. And so on.

Starting from the first few Soko Ban-esque learner levels, X-It cranks up the number of objects and the complexity of each across a hundred and odd levels. To avoid you getting stuck fast, you can enter the game at every fifteenth level, and compared with some of the horrendous level codes of recent times the ones in X-It are merciful keyboard-typeable six digit codes.

EUTHANASIA

Playing the game directs your swearing mostly where it belongs (the puzzles) and not at stupid problems or disk accessing, and much fun was had alternately cursing when I was stuck and punching the air in righteous jubilation when I cracked a level.

The problems? Well, lives – do you need or want lives in puzzle games? Isn't being stuck on a level punishment enough, without all the added stress (and disk accessing) of returning to the menu to type in a code every five attempts? And why're all the characters tiny and the playing area only about 15% of the screen? Shurely shome mishtake? The time allowances are a bit strict too, leaving no margin for you to make a couple of mistakes and just scrape in. And the music's crap, and plays in the menus even after you've turned it off. But, hey, small problems in a sensibly-priced, rather endearing puzzler.

There's masses of exciting blocks and floor tiles here, but to detail it all would take up far too much... (Space? Ed)

Fridge unit plus power equals frozen path – simple, really.

● CAM WINSTANLEY

UPPERS More variation than most puzzlers, cheap (possibly 'er' after a couple of weeks, eh Psygnosis?), and not the kind of game you'll finish in a weekend. Unless you're better than me, that is.

DOWNERS Weeny graphics, messy limited lives, crap music and you're not likely to play it once you've done all the levels. Same as any other puzzle game really.

THE BOTTOM LINE

It's a puzzle game. And a jolly nice one too.

VALHALLA BEFORE THE WAR

"I've got it." "There's nothing there." "Amazing."

turn, with the aid of these traditional AMIGA POWER point blobs. (●)

● The levels. The levels are very large, and you can call up a map at any time. But, like Dream Web, the size is artificially inflated by spreading out the puzzles and objects to force you to do a lot of walking around. Your character moves extremely slowly and can't go diagonally. Scenery is deliberately placed in your way to make walking around even more annoying.

● The atmosphere. Valhalla - Before the War has no atmosphere. I'd assumed quite reasonably that the game took place in mediaeval times and was therefore considerably surprised to stumble across machine-guns, cement mixers, table lamps and electronic ghostbusting equivalents (a repeating crossbow, an irate artisan, a candle and a moody exorcist, for example) so friend player isn't brutally reminded that he's shuffling around solving a collection of logic problems? But no.

DARK/MIDGARD

● The speech. The speech is cleverly integrated into the game, with several puzzles revolving around finding pieces of paper and reading out the messages on them. (There's an especially neat bit where you find a password, but have to drink various potions to alter your voice so you can sing or whisper it as required.) But the speech is muffled and at points unintelligible. (There's a moment where a character demands "Bring me a scythe." It's supposed to be 'sign'.) Worse, on later levels your character doesn't bother explaining what an object is. "You already KNOW what that is," he mumbles testily. But clearly I don't. That is why I am asking for a description. So what if I've come across the object in a previous level, or is the game a test of memory as well?

● The logic. While the puzzles are logical (and in some cases entertainingly punnish) there's no attempt to put the puzzles in the context of the game.

they're just puzzles for the sake of it. As with Dream Web and the Dizzy games it's less a case of cleverly combining objects than waiting for someone to give you a key (or whatever). There's no sense to the objects either: what someone guards bears no relation to who they are (a king gives you a hearing aid, for example), and you find the most ridiculously important items hidden under paving slabs. Why? Because it is a computer game, of course.

● The deadly water. In Valhalla - Before the War, you are forced to cross rivers of deadly water. Sometimes there are stamina potions in rooms beyond the rivers of deadly water. Sometimes (say, in the first half of level two) there are not. So you can die through no fault of your own beyond not doing things in exactly the order Vulcan dictate.

● The grammar. Valhalla - Before the War is an adventure with books to read and messages to discover. They are all riddled with grammatical errors.

● The save routine. You can save once per level, the new save overwriting the older one. Even on the hard drive.

● The longevity. Once I understood the way the designer's mind worked (matching objects with synonyms, for example) I rampaged through the game. Level four (the last and hardest) took three hours to beat, including all the walking around. In all the game's taken a weekend to finish.

Eugh.

I was going to open this review with a digression about Frank Welker but he'll have to wait. Valhalla - Before the War demands the full word count. It's the 'prequel' to Valhalla (AP39, 19%) with you now cast as the villain plotting to bump off the king. The unspottable traps from the first game have been removed so you can walk around without fear of plummeting through an apparently sound paving slab. This is the Good Thing about Valhalla - Before the War.

The Bad Things about Valhalla - Before the War are manifold, or at least eight. Let us examine each in UPPERS Good use of speech in puzzles. Some neat puns. It's linear but there's plenty of 'give'. You can die, but never unexpectedly. Painless controls. Looks appealing. Paving slabs with objects hidden under them have blobs on them. You can turn off the pointless wittering. You need only swap disks between levels. It's hard-drive installable.

DOWNERS Once you've tumbled to the designer's approach, the puzzles are dismissively simple. Anachronisms ruin the atmosphere. Some of the speech is difficult to make out. You can save one game per level. It uses the odious device of spreading out the objects and having a slow-moving character to make the game seem bigger.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Valhalla - Before the War is a 1982 text adventure with graphics: you walk around, finding incongruous objects under floors, giving them to people and receiving incongruous objects to give to other people. It isn't engaging, it isn't involving and it isn't at all fun. Few lessons have been learnt from the first game. Dismayingly poor.

19 PERCENT

THE BOTTOM LINE

Completely different. A1200 No it isn't.

GUARDIAN

The Game of Champions? On an A1200? REJOICE.

A1200

Level 3.3. Ah, how this takes me back. To the title screen, usually.

Runs on: A1200
Publisher: Acid
Price: £30
Release: Out now

My word, I'd forgotten how exciting this game was. Cursed by a trough in the Yorkshire Dale of my spatial perception, I'd been dismissed from the high score table of the CD32 version by shadowy music promoter Paul Mellerick and, after a few embarrassing attempts to regain former glories, I'd left the Guardian arena, spotlight and to a terrible silence.

Then, suddenly, the A1200 conversion turned up. In a pointlessly big box with a nice picture on the front, and everything. Minutes later I was careening through the pyramid back streets of Level 3.3 with no lives and no energy, one lander to kill and a couple of tanks hurling laser bolts across my scuttering path with terrifying accuracy. I died, of course, but not before wresting a hash from the lander's claws and settling it decisively. The game of champions once more had me in its grasp.

"Minutes later I was careening"

PICKERING

Guardian (the Game of Champions) (that I'm once again the best at) is Defender in first-person 3D. And Defender being one of the most fearsome, claustrophobically exhilarating games ever in the history of all things, this is no bad deal. The A1200 game's a faultless conversion from the CD32 original blessed with 90% in AP43 except with a few faults. No bombastic CD music. (The third planet's 1970s cop show track (Stock exterior shot of mismatched partners strutting down busy US street with people in background looking at the camera) is sorely missed.) Slightly irritating disk access between levels. Slightly irritating non-recognition of second drive although once you've swapped from the program to the levels disk that's it. Befuddling mouse control option for non-CD32 joypad owners involving the mouse and buttons dictating your ship's direction and speed, plus the space bar for smart bomb, return for fire, tab for missiles and the left alt key for 'flip'. (While mouse control is fun for the novelty of it, and certainly helps in those swishy sharp turn manoeuvres, I find it practically impossible to use seriously. Lunging across the keyboard to 'flip' or dash off a rocket is extremely silly and even flying stably straight up in the air so I can switch the viewing angle to the superior long, high shot is agonisingly difficult.) No keyboard-only option. And – hwoop – it's alarmingly unplayable.

To keep up the speed of the game, every third frame (or whatever) is missed out, so objects flick from spot to spot. It's impenetrably confusing and means you're always reacting far too late to something. Fortunate then that Guardian defaults to a low detail view which limits the distance at which objects appear on the screen, maintains the CD32's frightening and impressive running speed and subtly Taste my foul eggs once more, you cur.

Tanky Tanky. Whirly Whirly.

improves the game as obstacles lurch violently into your path. Not, in truth, alarmingly unplayable at all then, but it's nice to have a little excitement in a review that basically says "Guardian A1200 – it's just as fantastically exciting as the CD32 original."

● JONATHAN NASH

The game – it has started.

UPPERS Incredibly fast, incredibly playable, incredibly exciting, incredibly tough Defender clone. In first-person 3D. Hard drive-installable (sort of – the levels are still read from floppy). It saves your high scores on the hard drive version. No music.

DOWNERS The mouse control's unpleasant, and there's no keyboard option. You really need a CD32 joypad to get the best out of the game. The high detail option's useless. It's still overly tricky to gauge the height of the floating power-ups. No music.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Guardian is the Game of Champions. And now it's on the A1200. Buy it, because you know we're right. As always.

RISE OF THE ROBOTS

(Time Warner Interactive)

"To be the Supervisor in Rise of the Robots," enthuse T Rawlings and B McCormack of Oxfordshire, seemingly unaware that as the five percent we awarded Rise two issues ago suggested, here at AP we were looking forward more to being locked for eternity in a room that smelt of fish with only our old Geography teachers and a perpetually looped tape of Whigfield's Saturday Night for company than the arrival of any news about Time Warner Interactive's laughably appalling beat-'em-up, "here's what to do."

"Start a one player game and lose to the Military Droid. Set the options to Difficulty: hard; Timer: off; T Bouts: on; Cinematics: on; Shadows: on; and Screen Shade: on. Start up a two player game, then on the handicap screen push left so that the red bar moves about a quarter of the way into player one's side, and back about six times until the screen flashes. After this has happened, cycle through the opponents and you should find her in the list after the sentry droid ready for a second player to select. Her Special Move, incidentally, is Down, Towards, Up, Down, Away and Up."

MR BLOBBY

(Millennium)

"Not as bad as you might expect," we discovered when we reviewed Mr Blobby the game in the not-too-distant past, which is ironic because in real life, Mr Blobby is every bit as bad as you might expect, and Noel Edmonds worse. Here though, without further ado, are some codes 'surplied' (as he puts it) by Simon Pegler of Worcester.

Level 1 - babe	Level 15 - eneb	Level 29 - hohl
Level 2 - ooah	Level 16 - fmbf	Level 30 - bojo

"Now don't ask me what happened," adds Simon, "but having put in the code to level 41 and completed it, I was given the code to the level 60 instead." He continues: "Also, one useful thing that I have noticed is that if you lose a life, then if you can manage to find a clock and press ENTER you should gain a life back again." And as a stern final warning, he adds: "Leave the viking helmet well alone as it will only slow you down."

K240

(Gremlin)

Scheming Celt turncoat Steve McGill demonstrated his inadequacies by neglecting to include these cheats in his 'comprehensive' guide to K240. We salute Cian Caball of Limerick, Ireland for putting him straight. Type in any of the following on the main view screen and press return...

skyscraper - shortens the construction time of all future building loadsadosh - adds 100,000 credits telescope - shows all asteroids iceman - freezes all asteroids icbm - gives you four of every missile and satellite leming - adds 50 to population

SENSIBLE WORLD OF SOCCER DEMO

(Issue 43 Coverdisk)

Stephen Clark of Glasgow writes in to let us know about a cheat he has found for the demo we gave away on the front of issue 43. (Not that we have tried it on the full game to tell you that it doesn't work on that as well, but we doubt Sensible would have been so silly as to let it slip them by. Although...) Go to the transfers screen and purchase one of two players. Make sure that they take you as low as possible on money without going into the red, but low enough so that after the next match has been played, you will be. Return to the transfer screen, go for any players you want and you should be able to spend up to £50,000,000 on each because although your money keeps going into the red, nothing is ever said about it. And don't forget while doing this that you can buy another player from the same team as the one you are making a bid for. (So you could, for example, buy Giggs or Cantona at the same time as, say, Dennis Irwin.)

(Binary Asylum)

Mission five – IMAGO
Mission nine – TIBURON
Mission thirteen – ARGUS
Mission seventeen – MARTEN
Mission twenty one – SOCKIN
Mission twenty five – GANNPAY Marcus Cox of Leicester? Thanks for those. And as pointed out in last month's Last Resort (but considering most people tend to start scouring down the list of games advertised by Special Reserve on the inside front cover for spelling mistakes, or trying to improve their speed at reading upside-down before they'd consider turning to the Last Resort for a read, probably worth pointing out again), having finished the game you'll be given the code 'FRAMPAGE' which, typed in as a password in the normal place, enables you to run through the missions again in charge of a Kestrel Jet, handling more like the spaceship in Virus than the original chopper you were given.

TOWER ASSAULT

(Team 17)

Although we didn't take too kindly to this latest addition to the Alien Breed family, it didn't stop Mark Dolphin of Stourbridge sending in a liberating envelope of justice to vanquish the evils of disaster. (His words.) It went on a bit, but this is essentially what he was trying to say:

From your start position head one screen up and one left for a tri-laser; to the bottom left of the screen for an extra life. Work your way up the stores collecting ammo, keys, credits to the massive stockpile of keys on the third level. Head to Civilian level three and west to the computer on Engineering level three. Spend your first 6000 credits on a high powered machine gun, then heat-seekers, flamer and laser. And for passwords, try 'EJDSNDAIDCAAADC', 'EEFCJDAASDCAAADS' and 'EEHLLDAASDCAAADS'. Not too revealing, I know, but it'll have to do until someone writes in with something better.

(Team 17)

The code for level three of the CD version, according to a random piece of paper in this month's Complete Control Mailbag, is 'CASSTAAADDZ', whilst Simon Pegler of Worcester reckons that entering the password as 'ZZZZZZZZZZ' will get you twenty lives and most weapons. Simon, and RPOPITMCCM, we salute you.

TOP GEAR 2

(Gremlin)

Without going into details, at the time of writing I've actually become detached from my collection of back issues of AMIGA POWER and, having not done much revision of late, am entirely unable to comment on the anything we may, or may not, have said about Top Gear 2, nor on the implications on the world that printing these passwords (sent in by Matthew Newman of Surrey) might have. Sitting here on a lonely Monday evening behind my keyboard busy typing out this month's Complete Control, I also find myself unable to fully remember quite how exactly I got this job in the first place, unable to cease wondering why I seem to have computer games on the brain for at least half of my waking hours, and unable to convince myself that maybe I really do do this job for the love of the Amiga and not simply for the money. But life, as it always seems to do in these cases, goes on. Here (sigh) are those codes.

MORTAL KOMBAT 2

"How do you do all the finishing moves?" asks Stephen Gorton of Cleveland thinking to ANNOY US with his TRICKY query.

Games maestro Rich Pelley answers him in a sort of 'cut-out-and-keep' or even 'swap-with-your-friends' kind of way. Just for a change, you know. We're like that.

LIU KANG

Playing as: The bicycle kick is fast and, if used properly, excellent for surprising your opponent, but make sure that you are in close.

Liu Kang Combo: Start with a jumping kick then, and as you begin to land, tap Towards, then as you do, press Fire and you'll let off a fireball. You can also do this just after you've launched into a Concorde Kick.

Jumping Fireball	Towards, Towards, Fire
Standing Fireball	Towards, Towards, Fire
Crouching Fireball	Down, Down, Fire
Concorde Kick	Away, Towards, Fire
Bicycle Kick	Fire (hold for 5 seconds)
Dragon Morph	Down, Towards, Away, Away, Fire (up close)
Wheel Kick	Towards, Up, Away, Down (from block hold Fire)
Pit/Spikes	Away, Towards, Towards, Fire
Babality	Down, Down, Towards, Away, Fire
Friendship	Towards, Away, Away, Away, Fire

JOHNNY CAGE

Playing as: The Shadow Kick is an excellent retaliation move, perfect for combos. When a player sweeps you, block and quickly kick. Watch out for the red shadow kick which occurs randomly and makes a weird zapping noise.

Johnny Cage Combo: Wack your unsuspecting opponent with your finest jumping kick then, as they are recovering, let rip with a Shadow Kick.

High Fireball	Towards, Down, Away, Fire
Low Fireball	Away, Down, Towards, Fire
Shadow Kick	Towards, Away, Towards, Fire
Shadow Uppercut	Away, Down, Away, Fire
Package check	Down, Fire (up close)
Torso Rip	Down, Down, Towards, Towards, Fire (up close)
Decapitation	Towards, Towards, Down, Up, Down, Fire (up close)
Pit/Spikes	Down, Down, Down, Fire
Babality	Away, Away, Away, Fire
Friendship	Down, Down, Down, Fire

RAYDEN

Playing as: The Torpedo is recommended for sheer surprise value.

Rayden combo: Flying Kick, then Torpedo.

Lightning Toss	Down, Towards, Fire
Dive Attack	Away, Away, Towards, Fire
Teleport	Down, Up, Fire
Shocker	Fire (hold for 2 seconds, and works in two player mode only)
Super Shocker	Block, Fire (hold for 4 seconds)
Super Punch	Fire (hold for 6 seconds)
Pit/Spikes	Block, Up, Up, Up, Fire
Babality	Down, Down, Up, Fire
Friendship	Down, Away, Towards, Fire (keep distance)

SUB ZERO

Playing as: The Ice Bolt remains from the original game, and is still one of Sub Zero's most effective moves. Freeze your opponent, use a shatter punch, then just as they are about to get up again, send off another bolt.

Sub Zero Combo: Freeze, kick, freeze the ground below, Uppercut and Slide.

Ice Bolt	Down, Towards, Fire
Ground Freeze	Down, Away, Fire
Slide	Block, Fire, Fire, Fire
Pitch-O-Doom	Fire, Away, Away, Down, Towards, Fire and hold Fire (must be opposite side of screen)
Super Freeze	Towards, Towards, Down, Fire
Shatter Punch	Towards, Down, Towards, Towards, Fire (up close)
Pit/Spikes	Towards, Towards, Down, Fire
Babality	Down, Away, Away, Fire
Friendship	Away, Away, Down, Fire

SCORPION

Playing as: The Spear Throw is easy to use and effective, so use it as much as possible.

Scorpion Combo: Try activating the Spear Throw whilst sailing through the air in a Flying kick. Land and finish with an Uppercut or Roundhouse.

Spear		Away, Away, Fire
Decoy		Down, Away, Fire
Scissors Kick		Towards, Down, Away, Fire
Mid-Air Throw		Meet in air and Down
Spear swipe		Towards, Towards, Towards, Down, Fire (close)
Flamer		Block, Up, Up, Release Fire (up close)
Big Flamer		Block, Away, Away, Up, Up, Release Fire
Pit/Spikes		Towards, Towards, Down, Fire
Babality		Down, Away, Away, Fire
Friendship		Away, Away, Down, Fire

KITANA

Playing as: Fan Throws, basically, are great.

Kitana Combo: Corner your opponent, Fan Lift them, then when they're in the air, jump forwards and kick them. Chuck another fan in their direction, and position yourself ready to deliver an Uppercut as they land.

Fan Swipe		Down, Fire
Fan Toss		Towards, Towards, Fire
Fan Lift		Away, Away, Away, Fire
Square Wave Punch		Towards, Down, Away, Fire
Decapitation		Block, Fire, Fire, Fire, Fire
Kiss-off		Towards, Towards, Down, Towards, Fire (up close)
Pit/Spikes		Towards, Down, Towards, Fire
Babality		Down, Down, Down, Fire
Friendship		Down, Down, Down, Up, Fire

JAX

Playing as: Ground Slam. A lot.

Jax Combo: If you pass an opponent in mid-air, kick out at them whilst holding Block. Not only will the kick drain substantial energy, but the block should result in a Back-breaker.

Earthquake Punch		Fire (hold for 3 seconds)
Gotcha Grab		Towards, Towards, Fire
Energy Wave		Towards, Down, Away, Fire
Back Breaker		Meet opponent in air, Down, Fire
Hand Clap		Towards, Towards, Towards, Fire (up close)
Arm Rip		Block, Fire, Fire, Fire, Fire (keep distance)
Pit/Spikes		Hold Block, Up, Up, Down, Release Fire (up close)
Babality		Away, Towards, Away, Towards, Fire
Friendship		Away, Away, Towards, Towards, Fire

REPTILE

Playing as: The Orb will set your opponent up nicely for an uppercut. Just chuck it in and wait for them to come to you.

Reptile Combo: Release a Forceball from close range, then as your opponent flies towards you, chuck in an uppercut and Slide.

Acid Spit		Towards, Towards, Fire
Orb		Away, Away, Fire
Slide		Block, Fire, Fire, Fire, Release
Invisibility		Block Up, Up, Release Fire
Invisible Kill		Towards, Towards, Towards, Fire (up close)
Tongue Lash		Away, Away, Down, Fire (must be half a screen away, and red tongue required)
Pit/Spikes		Towards, Towards, Down, Fire
Babality		Down, Away, Away, Fire
Friendship		Away, Away, Towards, Fire

BARAKA

Playing as: The Blade Fury hurts a lot. Use it when in close, or to counteract a flying kick.

Baraka Combo: Flying kick and throw blades.

Double Kick		Fire (hold for 2 seconds, up close)
Blade Swipe		Down, Fire
Blade Fury		Away, Away, Away, Fire
Blue Spark		Down, Away, Fire
Decapitation		Block, Away, Away, Away, Release Fire
Skewer and Lift		Away, Towards, Down, Towards, Fire (up close)
Pit/Spikes		Towards, Towards, Down, Fire
Babality		Towards, Towards, Towards, Fire
Friendship		Block, Up, Towards, Towards, Release Fire

MILEENA

Playing as: The Teleport Kick is good, and best used when your opponent is in the air.

Mileena Combo: A Flying Kick, followed by a Sai Throw, Groundroll and Uppercut.

Teleport Kick		Towards, Towards, Fire
Roll Attack		Away, Away, Down, Fire
Sai Toss		Fire (hold for 2 seconds)
Psycho Stab		Towards, Away, Towards, Fire (up close)
Sucka		Away, Fire (hold for three seconds)
Pit/Spikes		Towards, Down, Towards, Fire
Babality		Down, Down, Down, Fire
Friendship		Down, Down, Down, Up, Fire

KUNG LAO

Playing as: The Ground Teleport is simple to pull-off, with the advantage that you can still punch and kick, even when reappearing.

Kung Lao Combo: Activate the Shield Spin, then jump in for a mid-air kick, land and hold Down and Fire to pull-off a Diving Kick.

Teleport		Down, Up, Fire
Hat Toss		Away, Towards, Fire
Whirlwind Spin		Block, Fire (hold for 3 seconds)
Aerial Kick		Down, Down, Fire
Hat Decapitation		Fire (hold for 2 seconds, at long range)
Split		Towards, Towards, Towards, Away, Fire (keep distance)
Pit/Spikes		Towards, Towards, Towards, Down, Fire
Babality		Away, Away, Towards, Towards, Fire
Friendship		Away, Away, Away, Down, Fire

SHANG TSUNG

Playing as: Shang Tsung has the ability to Morph from one character to another, and is pretty nifty with the old fireball too.

Shang Tsung Combo: Chuck a Fireball, immediately launch into a flying kick, then as they are recovering, sweep their legs and finish with a punch.

Morph into opponent:

Liu Kang		Away, Towards, Towards, Fire
Kung Lao		Away, Down, Away, Fire
Johnny Cage		Away, Away, Down, Fire
Reptile		Hold Block, Up, Down, Fire
Sub Zero		Towards, Down, Towards, Fire
Kitana		Keep tapping Block
Jax		Down, Towards, Away, Fire
Mileena		Fire (hold until you morph)
Baraka		Down, Down, Fire
Rayden		Down, Away, Towards, Fire

Other moves:

1 Skull		Away, Away, Fire
2 Skulls		Away, Away, Towards, Fire
3 Skulls		Away, Away, Towards, Towards, Fire
Soul Suck		Fire Up, Down, Up, Fire
Dive-O-Death Fire		(hold for three seconds and keep distance)
Pit/Spikes		Down, Down, Up, Down, Fire
Friendship		Away, Away, Down, Towards, Fire

In the month that our readers shockingly have a go at Sensible in the letters page, Cam Winstanley continues to keep reader perception and the profile of Cannon Fodder 2 high by battling his way through yet more of the game many people have been calling "quite literally the sequel to Cannon Fodder".

CANNON

MISSION 9

Phase 3

Annoyingly, in both this and other levels in CF2, the civilians have a marked tendency to throw themselves under vehicles or get caught in crossfire, which makes finishing missions a bit of a random affair. All you've got to do on this one is work your way up the left hand side of the map and avoid the two mines (1). Even on a monitor they're hard to spot, so I dare say they're totally invisible if you're playing it on a television.

Once you're at the top of the screen, jump into the tank (2) and carefully work your way down to the armoured bunker thingy (3) at the bottom. This is the random bit of the level, as even if you stop, civilians will occasionally walk into your tank and die. Assuming you avoid any roadside fatalities, just blast the bunker door to finish the phase.

Phase 4

This one had me so completely stumped that in the end I swallowed my pride and phoned up Sensible to help me on my way. You start the level without any explosives, and the only rockets are right at the top of the map (1). Since the helicopter will hunt you down if you run for the rockets, you have to hide all but one of your men in the trees (2) and send the remaining bloke to grab the rockets. Then it's just the fearsomely hard matter of blasting all the enemy snipers (3) and taking out the chopper when it lands.

Phase 5

The last phase of this mission's pretty easy, requiring just a fairly leisurely wander round the level. Wait a second for the nearby enemy launcher to blow himself up, then cross the river to get the grenades (1) before shooting the launcher on the island. Bomb the nearby hut, then take out the two doors at the middle (2). Shoot the launcher (3), bomb the tent in front of it and then destroy the turret (4) by throwing a grenade over the wire.

Once inside the compound, move the helicopter away from the hut (5) and then blow it up. Take out the final hut (6) from behind the wire, then go into the central compound and kill the survivors by landing your helicopter on them. Mop up the other compound (6) in a similar way, and then take the hostage back to the little UN tent. Simple stuff. Time to put the kettle on, you've earned a nice cuppa.

FODDER 2

MISSION 10

Phase 1

There's a huge rift between knowing how to do this one and actually managing to finish it, as the knights are both fast and accurate. It's worth knowing that you're:

- Better off inside the compound than outside it, but that:
- The inside of the compound is, unfortunately, full of pigs. Exploding pigs. Shoot them as quickly as you can.

Run past the first few huts and then grenade the two huts (1) nearest the compound entrance. This slows the rush of troops into the pig pen, and gives you more time to shoot all the pigs and grab the grenades (2). The idea's then to keep the knights on the outside of the compound while you run up to the fence and bung grenades over, blowing apart the remaining four huts.

Phase 2

This level's too random for its own good. Even if you know what to do, you'll probably have to keep plugging away until it lets you finish. The problem is that if any civilian huts are destroyed, you lose, but the three enemy tanks (1) are fearsomely trigger happy. If you cross the river, blast the turret (2) and then send two men to get the tank (3) then eventually, you'll make it. Not very satisfactory I know, but I didn't design it.

MISSION 11

This is a very silly one, and not (in my opinion) particularly in the spirit of Cannon Fodder. You've basically got to grab the rockets and move either left or right, but since the rocket fire's random, surviving the first three seconds is based entirely on chance. Shoot at the enemy turrets and huts if you like, but one way or another, the level will be over with in a few seconds.

MISSION 12

Phase 1

The entire level's littered with holes, which are in fact tunnel entrances. If you take out the castle (1) and hut (2) then the supply of troops coming out of the holes will rapidly dry up. There's a couple of crates of grenades (3) to help you out, and nothing really that scary to go up against. It's not a hard level.

Phase 2

Continuing the trend for levels that are over the moment they begin, you've got about a second to jump into the battering ram and roar off before the enemy rams take you out. The best way is to start the level, position the cursor over the vehicle and then press ESC, so you're positioned perfectly the next time.

Once you're in the vehicle, simply race around the track flattening all the soldiers, but look out for the extra enemy battering ram waiting for you at the end of the first lap. Since you haven't got any weaponry, you've got to get the bad guys to kill themselves in one of two "egeineouse" ways. You can keep doing laps until the helicopter witch thing bombs the enemy vehicles, or you can wait until all the rams are together, and jump out of your own. As you flee for cover, the enemy vehicles will ram into yours and explode, leaving you free to stalk the helicopter until it lands, and rocketting it.

Phase 3

This one's just a straight forward blaster, requiring you to pick up the grenades from (1) and the hostage from (2). The compounds at (3) are sealed and the soldiers can't get out, so leave them till last and hoot with glee as tens of bodies fly into the air as a direct result of a single grenade.

Phase 4

As soon as the level starts, click on a point above the trees (1) and switch to rockets on the move. If you're fast enough, you'll be able to take out the helicopter on the ground, and if you grenade the turret, there'll be a 50 rocket power-up underneath, although I

Phase 4

Phase 3

Phase 4

reckon you're better off without it.

Simply chart a zig-zag path up the level by clicking directly on each of the enemy snipers (2) and changing course when you shoot one. At the top of the map, make one final heading change to the right, rocket the turret and blast the hut. It's a bit frantic, but not really hard.

Phase 5

There're fairly mean turrets in the corners of the map (1) and just enough grenades (2) to take everything out. Since the hostage (3) stops and puts her hands up every time there's a baddie on the screen, you should wipe out everyone first before going to get her, otherwise the journey back to the middle of the map is a bit of a drag.

Phase 6

Ignore the turrets – that's my advice. Simply jump in the vehicle, zoom over to the two pressure pads and jump out. If you move your men underneath the pads and then directly upwards, then they'll stand on both at the same time, activating them, summoning the UFO and neatly finishing this month's solution at the end of a mission. No doubt next month will see us back on those nasty purple alien levels. Humph.

Phase 5

Phase 6

COMPLETE

JUNGLE

PART 2

Nice of you to wait for me to finish. Thank you.

Last month we did one to five, and logically, we're following that up with campaigns six to nine this month. Follow us, and you'll finish the game. Heck, you might even enjoy it.

CAMPAIGN 6: SNOW FORTRESS PASSWORD: WSDVNHCF3VF

Hey, check out all that snow. Nice isn't it? All white and everything. Anyway, the first thing to do on this level is open the landing zone, just west of your starting position. To 'open' it, fire a couple of rounds at the igloo and then you can destroy the little huts surrounding it for all sorts of prizes and things, including a useful speed winch.

Plenty of white on this level makes these captions a lot easier to read.

Mission 1: Wild Bill

Although the point of this mission is to rescue Wild Bill, you've got to pick up some POWs as well. In fact, pick up five, drop them off at the LZ to finish the mission and then pick up the rest of them because you might need some armour points later on in the campaign. With prison camps like this it's always best to attack around the edge, taking out the towers and the like, before attempting to actually rescue anyone. Oh yeah, and Wild Bill is in the hut next to the two towers in the middle of the camp. Blow up one of these towers to get an armour crate as well.

Most of the huts on this level are hiding special bonuses. So shoot 'em.

Mission 2: Radar Sites

You've seen and dealt with the likes of these before, and apart from harder protection in the form of M1 Battle Tanks, there's nothing to worry that much about. Underneath the northern-most radar truck is an armour crate, so be careful not to fire too many rounds at the truck or you won't be able to pick up the armour crate because you'll have destroyed it. Also don't stray too far into the fenced area or the enemy will be well prepared for you.

Mission 3: Missile Depot

Stupidly impossible if you don't take out the radar sites first, but if they don't know you're coming (see last mission) then it makes things a lot easier.

Take your time on this one. Use your chaingun to take out the towers and missile the M1 tanks. Then just gun the sheds to reveal the missiles and carry on shooting to blow 'em up.

Pick up the top gun, Wild Bill, and then go for it.

'Howdy, Wild Bill! You took a little frozen... lucky for you the guns are warmed up. Good to have you aboard.'

Mission 4: Soviet General

Right, yet another easy mission for you to handle, just blow up the tower and tank (and if you've got this far you should know how to do it) and then gun the house to pick up the General.

Mission 5: Launchers

Yawn! Oh, I'm sorry, but so far this hasn't been all that taxing has it? Still, let's get on with it. Although there's plenty of stuff to grab your attention (either a soldier, a Gatling gun, an M1 Tank or a combination of the three), lots of evasive action and missile firing should mean you don't sustain too much damage.

Once all that's out of the way, chaingun the launcher and you're done. Easy, eh?

Now that you can see the missiles, the only thing left to do is blow them up.

Hard tanks, and you'll have to do a lot of flying around to avoid the flak.

Ooh, chase me, chase me

It must be Spiderman's secret hideaway.

STRIKE

Mission 6: Power Lines

Now it's time for some serious gaming. Before you can even think about taking out the power lines, destroy the radar site north-west of the main power plant and now attack the power pylons. Underneath the power plant is an armour crate so be careful you don't destroy it. Blow up the rest of the tanks, pylons and things and in the little hut, just north (and a bit over to the east) of where the power used to be, you'll find a lovely extra life.

Missions 7 and 8: Fortress and Warheads

It's another one of those two-in-one missions again. And even though they're supposed to be covered by snow drifts they're still really easy to spot. Concentrate on getting rid of the helicopters before anything else, though, because they can be a real pain. You can do the missions in order if you like (if you see a little thing sticking out of the ground there'll be a warhead inside) but it's really not worth the hassle of flying about all over the place to complete the missions separately. There's usually a surprise hiding inside one of the buildings as well, something like a soldier with an AK-47 or a even a Tactical, but that really shouldn't cause you too much of a problem.

CAMPAIGN 7: RIVER RAID PASSWORD: THCKNL6MDRH

It's different vehicle time again. This time though, you're getting to grips with the top secret Stealth Fighter. Be careful when flying this thing because with up and down controlling the height of the plane you can crash. And if you bump into anything you'll lose a life. Still, you do have infinite ammo and fuel as a little bit of a bonus. Oh yeah, and directly to the east of your starting position are four little stone pyramids protected by two Twinguns. Get rid of them, fire at the stones and four (yes, I said four) extra lives are yours.

Mission 1: F-117 Stealth Fighter

Loaded up with lives, you can now feel a little more confident about things. Fly south to the hangar and use those Hydras and the odd Hellfire to take out the Twinguns. Now land and get ready for some really tricky flying.

Mission 2: Troop Bridges

Infinite fuel and ammo may be yours, but that still doesn't stop the fighter from being ridiculously hard to control. Spend some time flying around, especially learning the turning circle, before you attempt any mission. Once you've got used to it, start on the bridges to the south and work your way north. Don't bother with the tanks or whatever near the bridges, just fire a few missiles as you pass over each bridge and then move on to the next. When you've finished the last one, you should be at the top of the map and ready for the next mission.

Plenty of space inside, and a very generous back garden as well.

Mission 3: Drug Fields

Reckon you're a dab hand with the old Stealth Fighter do ya? Well, this mission will soon sort you out. For a start, if you fly towards the towers at anything less than maximum height you're going to hit them and lose a life (now you know why you were given four extra ones at the start of the level). The best thing to do on this mission is just to attack the fields with a few missiles and then move onto the next one until they've all gone.

As you've probably discovered the Stealth Fighter's a bugger to control. Fortunately, if you land it you can get back in the much more manoeuvrable chopper. Just line it up with the airstrip and lower the plane. The game will take over and land properly if you do it correctly. Or you could just die and that way you'll be in the Comanche automatically. Or you can ignore our advice and just carry on using the very difficult to fly fighter.

Mission 4: Patriot Missiles

No one ever said it was going to be easy, so just make sure you've got a full complement of everything (fuel, ammo and armour) and if it moves, blow it up. And if you start to run a bit short on fuel, there's some over by the starting point.

Mission 5: Fuel Depot

A couple of missions left, and you might have noticed that there's no fuel about the place. Well, don't worry too much about that because your next stop is the fuel depot. Your task here is to destroy all the BIG fuel tanks and then worry about the other sort of tanks, the moving and firing missiles type. Still, a couple of Hellfires should see them off. Then you can look around the depot (try where a tank used to be) for some much needed fuel.

Mission 6: Nuclear Missiles

The motto 'be prepared' seems very apt for this mission, because you're not quite sure what the game is going to throw at you until it does. Each of the missile sites is hidden under a stone pyramid, but a few rounds of your chaingun will expose it to the world. Then you'll find it guarded by a couple of AK-47-touting soldiers, some Sheridan tanks, Twinguns or nothing at all. So take it carefully, and (hey) be prepared to get the hell out of there when you need to. Once you've picked up all the missiles, get back to base and get ready for the next campaign.

CAMPAIGN 8: MOUNTAINS PASSWORD 7GR7HPZJ97X

You're closing in, and the druglord and the madman and are almost yours. The small (and perfectly formed) stone pyramids on this campaign hide a variety of objects ranging from fuel, ammo and armour to nothing. So it might be worth flying around and sussing out what's where, because there's not a lot of fuel on this level for a start. That was a hint.

Mission 1: Control Towers

Things start to get a bit tricky now, as the game throws in all sorts of little unexpected things to make your life just a bit more interesting. The major things to worry about on this mission are the sneak attacks by various M1 Tanks. Although not very powerful, they do have a pretty impressive fire rate, and one of the tanks will also leave behind an armour crate when you blow him up, so make sure you remember to use it.

Mission 2: Tomahawk Missiles

Again the actual mission here isn't fraught with any danger (unless you can't see the rock formations hiding the missiles and just fly straight into them), but it's the fire-power protecting them that will cause you problems. The Mobile Cannons used can down a fully-armoured Comanche in two shots, so you need to be careful and quick. Once you've got them out of the way, chaingun the rock to reveal the missile and then shoot that.

Mission 3: Power Supply

More annoyances on this mission, provided this time by those Gatling Guns. They don't cause that much damage to you, but do take a good few hits before they blow up. Oh yeah, and there's also another chopper around the place, but a couple of Hellfires and some Hydras should make easy work of him.

Then you can get on with blowing up the various buildings to complete this mission.

Mission 4: Villa

With the power all out, you can now see where the villa is on the map. There's only an M1 Tank and a few AK-47-equipped soldiers hiding around the building to protect it, but as you blow the up the building and other bits, watch out for bonuses that might reveal themselves. Fly in front of the door to the villa, blast it with your chaingun, get rid of the soldiers and then go after the druglord.

Mission 5: Druglord

Not a stupid man, when you started to blow up his house, the druglord made a run for it. Fly to the east of the villa to the part of the river that forks, and you should see his helicopter appear from nowhere. Keep up with him, firing your guns as you chase him and destroy the chopper. Then just pick him up.

Mission 6: Air Strip

Not much of a problem here. Take out the helicopter first, then attack the cannons, and then blow up the stolen Stealth Fighters. No surprises or hidden stuff here, just lots of destruction. I like this mission. Lots.

Mission 7: Bunker

Look, it's his secret bunker. Bit big for a secret don't you think? Still, never mind, just take out the two Gatling Guns on the platforms and then use a variety of weapons on the bunker. You don't have to of course, it just makes things a bit more fun. When you've destroyed it, you'll move immediately onto the next mission.

Mission 8: Madman's Helicopter

As if by magic, the madman tries to escape in his helicopter. Just how or where that came from is a mystery, but hey, it's only a game. You'll need almost a full complement of ammo to bring down his helicopter, but once you have you can pick up the madman, and feel very proud of yourself. You've saved the day. And the free world. Well, almost.

CAMPAIGN NO. 9: RETURN HOME PASSWORD N4SJY7S6FB6

Let's be honest about this, having the Druglord and the Madman imprisoned in the city was a bit silly wasn't it? And now they've escaped and there are terrorists running all over the place. Because this isn't a proper campaign, you won't know what to do next until you complete the mission you're on. But hey, it's more exciting that way.

Mission 1: Air Force One

It's time to protect our chicken-like president again. In the first campaign he waits until the fighting is all over, and then on the last campaign, he's getting out early. His helicopter can't take too many hits, so be careful. And quick.

Mission 2: Enemy Weapons

Are you ready for this? Call me picky if you want, but this is one hell of a boring mission. Somewhere in the city are loads of Twinguns. All you've got to do is fly around the map and shoot them. They're not hard to destroy or even annoying in any way, it's just that this level is so boring to play.

Mission 3: Generals

Before you can get after the druglord and the madman, you'll need to know where they are (no really, you will). Find the two armoured command cars and destroy them with lots of Hydras. Then pick up the General and he'll tell you all. Wimp.

Mission 4: Druglord

Right, fly over to the where the Druglord is (use the map) and use all your weapons on the tour bus. Don't worry about hanging around waiting to pick him up. He's history. (Ooh, you ruthless cold-blooded killer, you.)

Mission 5: Madman

It's time to do the same to the madman. You'll probably need some more ammo before you can take out him and the oil tanker he's trying to get away in. So get some.

Mission 6: Nuke Missiles

Time to finish the game and not give a toss about the environment as you need to find the trucks with the nuclear missiles on them and then blow them up. Still, what's a couple of hundred years of nasty pollution as long as they don't destroy the White House, eh? Anybody know the words to 'The Star Spangled Banner'?

Anyway, realism aside, you can now sit back and enjoy the end sequence.

THE LAST RESORT

with Rich Pelley

Do you wake up in the middle of the night with icy cold bed sheets but drenched in lathered sweat? Can you hear voices? Sorry. Can't help you with that.

My theory is that next to no-one actually reads The Last Resort, and hence I can say more or less anything I like in these introductions without anybody really noticing. I can be sexist. (Phwoar. I really fancy that Nicole from the car adverts.) I can be racist. (All foreigners smell.) I can be controversial. (Well, I thought Stargate was really good. No, honestly.) I can be personal. (Terry Wogan's a twat.) And I can be totally unnecessarily rude. (NOB and POO.) (And clever. – Ed) And the beauty is, there's absolutely nothing anyone can do back to embarrass or humiliate me back. (Except, of course, getting your Mum to forward us one of your baby photos. – Ed)

LOOSE ENDS

If you could write in and help out any of these readers in distress, that'd be great. Saves me working.

Q "If you take a look at the upgrade panel on the Tiger Trader (second the last) on page 104 of the FRONTIER: ELITE 2 manual, you should notice a strange upgrade which, despite the hours I have put into playing the game, I have never encountered. What the hell is it?"

Gary Blakeny, Bootle

Q "Could anybody tell me what book John Travolta reads on the lavatory in PULP FICTION, as I was sitting behind a woman in a hat, who was in turn sat behind a 7'8" man with a 4'3" diameter afro, who was sitting in front of a circus performer juggling medicine balls? In an otherwise empty cinema." (It's "Modesty Blaise". – Cam)

The OFFICIAL CANNON FODDER Playing Guide

MISSION 14 PHASE 3

You only need two men to complete this mission (one if you're very good) so give them all the grenades and rockets and shove them into the chopper. The helicopter hasn't got any weapons, so land by (1) where you're out of range of any of the turrets. Grenade the hut (2) and then rocket the turret (3). This leaves two more turrets to take out (4,5), so creep forwards and rocket them as they appear at the edges of the screen. This is complicated by all the troops pouring out of the huts (6) so bomb them as soon as you've destroyed all the turrets.

All that's left to do is get back to the chopper, land near the three hostages (who'll be near the three destroyed huts) and take them back to the Red Cross tent (7). Don't be scared to land directly on top of them, as they're strangely immortal, which makes you wonder why they didn't just walk to safety under their own steam.

AMIGA POWER BACK ISSUES

KNOWLEDGE IS POWER. So any deficiencies in your understanding of Amiga games are effectively weaknesses in your struggle against life's continual onslaught. We therefore recommend you assemble a large collection of AMIGA POWER back issues.

ONLY £4 EACH!

BACK ISSUE OF THE MONTH

AP25 - MAY 1993

No collection of AMIGA POWERS would be complete without the celebrated AP25 – quite literally. It's our silver anniversary issue, and as such features our third All-Time Top 100 on the cover, along with a dinosaur and a girl with enormous bosoms. The coverdisk is particularly significant, as it contains not only a level of Beavers, but also a demo of the never-released Entity – this is the only way you'll ever get to play it. The reviews are great – things like Desert Strike and Flashback. And best of all, of course, there's Tim Tucker's legendary "Cor that was lucky, that plane just missed us" caption. AP25 – you'll hate it so much you'll want to die.

THE TOP 5 AMIGA POWERS

As voted for by the readers of AP.

- 3) Issue 28
- 4) Issue 33
- 5) Issue 30

ALSO LOOK OUT FOR...

AP26 – International Rugby Challenge – reviewed! And a nice cover.

AP28 – A cyberpunk special, with a review of Syndicate and more.

AP42 – 3-disk Super Stardust issue. A corker.

AP46 – Cows on wheels on the front.

AP37 – Our latest All-Time Top 100, and some fantastic Best PD Games Ever coverdisks. And a Banshee demo.

MANAGE SOME PREMIERS!

The expression on Steve's face while he was playing Premier Manager 3 said it all. But we are loath, as you know, to print photos of ourselves in AP, so you had to make do with his two-page review in AP44, at the end of which he awarded the game 83%. "It will eat your life if you give it the chance," he warned. So pleased were Gremlin that they've organised a competition, the winner of which will be presented with a satellite dish, including installation and a month's subscription to the Sports Channel. So you can watch football, presumably. Meanwhile, five scarcely-less-fortunate runners up will each receive a copy of Premier Manager 3.

YOUR TASK

What we want you to do is imagine, for a moment, that you are a theatrical agent representing several of history's prominent heads of government – ie, quite literally a 'premier' 'manager'. (No, come on, bear with us. A satellite dish, remember?) And it's the pantomime season. You therefore have a welcome opportunity to supplement your charges' flagging income (while creaming off your usual percentage, of course). But which leader would be most suitable for which rôle? Use your skill and judgement, along with your knowledge of each character's governmental style and human rights record, to assign one premier (or pair of premiers) to each of the available pantomimes. Write your choices on the back of a postcard (for example, if you think Cleopatra would ideally play the Pantomime Horse in Babes In The Wood, write 1a) and send it to: The Leader Is Fairest But All Are Divine Competition, AMIGA POWER, 30 Monmouth Street, Bath BA1 2BW to arrive by 31st March, 1995. The reader whose choices most closely match those of our carefully-selected panel of judges will win the satellite dish, with the runners-up prizes going to the five next-closest. (And say if you want the A500 or A1200 version, natch.)

THE PREMIERS

- 1) Cleopatra
- 2) General Franco
- 3) Lenin and Trotsky
- 4) Margaret Thatcher
- 5) Charles II

THE PANTOMIMES

- a) BABES IN THE WOOD
The Pavillion, Bournemouth

AND WIN A SATELLITE DISH AND SOME COPIES OF PREMIER MANAGER 3!

Starring Isla St Clair and Dana as the Babes, Wolf from Gladiators as Old Joe, John Inman as Widow Twanky and ????? as the Comedy Pantomime Horse.

b) CINDERELLA

The Dome, Brighton
Starring 'Dot' from Eastenders as Prince Charming, Ian Botham as the Fairy Godmother, George, Zippy and Bungle as the Ugly Sisters, John Inman as Widow Twanky and ????? as Cinderella.

c) PUSS IN BOOTS

Caesar's Palace, Bognor
Starring John Noakes as the Puss, Lesley Judd and Peter Purvis as the Boots, John Inman as Widow Twanky and ????? as the Queen.

d) MOTHER GOOSE

The Corn Exchange, Chepstow
Starring The Krankies as Mother and Father, 'Chegsy' from Canoe Squad as the Mysterious Lamp Salesman, John Inman as Widow Twanky and ????? as Mother Goose.

e) JACK AND THE BEANSTALK

Skegness Festival Theatre
Starring Derrick Griffiths as Jack, 'Mike' from Neighbours as Mother, Bernie Clifton as The Bloke Who Swapped Him The Beans For The Cow, John Inman as Widow Twanky and ????? as the Ogre.

THE RULES

1. Employees of Future Publishing and Gremlin will be kicked in if they try to enter.
2. The closing date is 31st March 1995. Entries received after this date will be eaten.
3. Questioning the editor's decision is futile. And will annoy him.

PREMIER 3 MANAGER 3

BUDGETS

There's no such thing as a dead Amiga game, they just get re-released in some sort of eternal cosmic cycle from full price to budget to compilation to £3 in a garage. And we review them. For you.

THE PATRICIAN

Runs on: A500, A600, A1200

Publisher: Ascon

Price: £17

Release: Out now

Ah, peace and quiet. Don't you just love it? There's no one in the office apart from me, I've got my favourite tunes coming out of the office CD player (These two facts are not unrelated. – Ed), and it has too be said I'm feeling pretty good. Just the right mood, I think, in which to play The Patrician.

The Patrician is a strategy game that's come out previously at full price (AP29 54%). Yep, it's no more complex to describe than that, but boy is it complicated to get to grips with. Well, not exactly to get to grips with, just to perfect and start making things happen. Here, let me explain...

The whole idea of the game is to trade goods, make money, influence people, attain power and make your life a success. And just like real life, it starts off simply enough (moving backwards and forwards from ports selling goods for more money than you paid for them) but then gets incredibly detailed and complex as you ply your trade, bribe officials and engage in all manner of other activities. There's no one singular route to finishing the game, and because there are so many different events and random happenings going on, no two games are ever the same. Sure, it's tactical, head-scratching stuff, but thanks to the fast mouse/menu system and some really nice graphics, you don't get too bogged down by all the facts and figures.

It did take a while to rub off on me, but once I'd built up a money-spinning route (selling wine and wood), I quickly made money, and then starting buying some more ships to make even more money. In fact I think I'll throw a celebration in the town square for everyone. Excuse me will you, I'm off for another go. (I still think it's boring. – Ed)

● PAUL MELLERICK

THE BOTTOM LINE

The depth is there, the detail is there, and if you persevere long enough you will find the gameplay as well. Although I can't see that too many people will be interested in 14th Century international trading, can you?

Right, simple enough this one. Three games. Civilisation, Lemmings and Frontier. A curious mixture. The games don't have much in common, except that they've all had a high profile in the past.

First there's the fabulous god-sim Civilisation (AP16 80%). Its dull, flat graphics aren't a terribly interesting environment in which to nurture mighty civilisations, and it's terribly slow-moving, but underneath lurks a big, deep strategy game that I've got a real fondness for.

Then, in the best let's-invent-a-whole-new-genre tradition we've got the original Lemmings. Lemmings is getting on a bit now, having originally been released in the murky pre-AP years, and its fiddly control system now taxes the patience more than it used to. But it's a true classic that has collectively given centuries of pleasure to many thousands of people.

Finally, Frontier (AP32 65%, or 75% on a 1200). Frontier, the sequel to Elite, is a game of spectacular vision – a whole galaxy to explore, with millions of planets to fly between. But it's dreadfully dull, with far too much tedious flying about looking for something interesting to do, and little sense of the supposed enormity of your surroundings. And the graphics are sluggish on an Amiga 500. Many disagree, and think it's great. But, like all who contradict AMIGA POWER, they are wrong.

A fairly decent package, then, particularly if you've got the stomach for Frontier.

EUROPEAN CHAMPIONS

could go on for a good couple of pages discussing the relative virtues of football games – ones that get it right, ones that get it wrong and the ones that just sit in the middle, being sort of enjoyable but not really. But I won't. Let's just say that European Champions isn't destined to become a classic.

From the horrible presentation to the game itself, there's just nothing sparkling, attractive or even remotely interesting about the game. There are plenty of teams, a couple of leagues to set up and even a (disgusting) tactics editor to use, but it's all been done elsewhere. Better.

There are two modes you can play the game in: an overhead view showing too little on-screen and with badly animated players; or the more friendly side-on view which improves things a bit and allows you put together passes and things, but doesn't really improve on the graphics. But it's the awkwardness of the thing – the passing and shooting especially – that causes all the problems.

Getting possession is easy enough but once you've got the ball, you can't pass quickly enough for it to work. The trouble is, once you've got the ball you've then got to decide what to do with it.

This means running with it until an arrow appears, and then deciding where the ball is going to go and with how much power. Read the manual and it sounds simple enough in theory, but try to put it into practice and it all goes horribly wrong. This basic flaw drags an average, if graphically poor, game down into the realms of the mediocre. And maybe even lower.

Price: £10

Release: Out now

Releasing a new game? Why not get a great new idea that you want to share with the world, and make heaps of cash into the bargain? Or maybe revamp an old game and make it look smashing and spangly new – as with Stardust, for example. You could always write a blatantly crap platform game or some cobbled together film licence, but why bother? Why not just shoot yourself? Or maybe you could take an existing idea and improve on it. After all, if you're going to base the game on one that you already know is great, then it shouldn't be so hard to improve it, should it? Well, should it?

Here lies the tragedy, for time after time we see games that are obvious copies of other, existing games, but simply not as good as the original. Like Rocketz and Gravity Force 2, one of which is an infinitely playable two-player battle game featuring inertia-packed spaceships flying round high gravity caves, whereas the other's a bit of an unplayable feeble shadow of the former.

Good points in Rocketz: There are different spaceships to choose from which handle differently. Some of the weapons are cool too, as along with homing missiles, you've got some firework-inspired ones that fizz off in different directions. When you're fatally damaged, you plunge out of control, which can be quite funny if you hit your opponent on the way down and take him out too. Like the magnets in GF2, there are airducts which either blow you off course or keep you suspended in the airflow. Unlike GF2, there's also a one-player mode where you fight and race the computer. And, of course, there are gorgeous rendered graphics throughout, and some palatable, atmospheric music.

Bad points in Rocketz: There are only eight levels compared with GF2's 60-plus, and even with maximum shields, the ships are so fragile that dogfights last for only a few seconds. The computer player's a bit thick and often crashes into walls if you just land and wait for it. The levels are all quite small and the scenery doesn't get damaged like it does in GF2. Most of all though, it simply isn't as much fun to play as GF2, and seeing as it's a tenner whereas GF2's on PD (Or the coverdisk of AP39 – Ed), that's why I'm comparing the two. Rocketz loses out to GF2 on pretty much every point. Long live Gravity Force 2.

● CAM WINSTANLEY

THE BOTTOM LINE

The graphics in Rocketz will probably impress your friends, and it's good fun for a short time, but it's no match for the mightiest two player game in the history of mankind. Order a back issue of AP39 to get GF2, and you'll have a better game, plus six quid still in your pocket. And a particularly tremendous issue of AP, of course.

HI-HO SILVER LINING

Paul Mellerick is a man trapped. Into reviewing games re-released onto CD. For a living. Hey! Life could be worse.

THE BIG 6: DIZZY COMPILATION

Codemasters/£30

Six isn't exactly a big number, is it? And these six Dizzy games, the full run-down being (deep breath) Dizzy: Prince of the Yolk Folk, Crystal Kingdom Dizzy, Magicaland Dizzy, Spellbound Dizzy, Treasure Island Dizzy and Fantastic Dizzy, aren't the biggest games of all time. But I think putting six games on one disk is a BIG achievement (Bang...thud. - Ed), so we'll let them get away with it. Just this once.

Anyway, for those of you that don't know anything about Dizzy, a brief explanation. Each Dizzy adventure is a multi-screen, collect-and-use, puzzley adventure type thing. You wander around the place and collect objects, and, using a gentle sort of lateral thinking (eg, if there's a fire blocking your way, throw a bucket of water on it to put it out) (That's pretty gentle. - Ed) you must complete your quest. Fame, fortune and the love of a good egg, Daisy, is your prize.

Dizzy is a refreshing little character and the puzzles, although not very complex, can sometimes be frustratingly hard until you discover what you're doing wrong. There's even a new CD soundtrack to accompany the action. Six versions of the same game on one disk will get repetitive, though, so rather than play all six games the minute you get them hom, this'll be the sort of compilation you'll dip into over a period of several weeks. And at a tenner its purchasability is secured.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Six good games for ten quid. Great value. The games themselves aren't too bad either so our hats are off to Codemasters for this.

So how do you turn a mouse-based point-and-click game into a joypad-based one? Well, actually you just take out all the mouse movements and replace them with the pad movements, which seems to work okay in the case of The Clue. Oh, and because the game's now on CD you can't save your progress as you go. You can have up to four games stored, but as soon as you turn off the CD32 you lose them. Bizarrely. Still, every time you complete a burglary you get a password which will allow you to continue from where you left off.

The CD version gives us the usual continuous music and the occasional

There are no differences between this and the AGA version we reviewed back in issue 43, right down to the price. So basically, it's the best golf game on the CD32 (although you might want to keep an eye open for Nick Faldo - see True Stories this issue), with attractive, rapidly-updating graphics, an intuitive control system and plenty of golfing atmosphere, along with the curious appeal that golf computer games have even to those who normally despise golf. A truly fine game.

THE BOTTOM LINE

A tremendously good golf game, and well worth seeking out even if golf normally does nothing for you.

84 PERCENT

bit of speech, although this seems to occur at random, with most dialogue simply being printed on the screen. The rest of the game remains the same, however - wander around a bit, talk to people, suss out the action and then commit a crime. And as Jonathan said in his review (issue 43), it's nice to see something original, and the burglary-planning sections work surprisingly well, but the pseudo-point-and-click-adventure sections in between are tiresome to plough through.

THE BOTTOM LINE

Another of those 'updated' CD games with some music and some speech, but it plays the same way as the normal versions.

17 Bit

It's always been said that the simplest games are the best. This is, of course, complete rubbish, because some of the really complex ones are great as well. But still, Viper is a really simple idea that turns out to be rather a lot of fun.

You are a line. A never ending line, drawn by the computer. You can control the direction you go in, but not the speed or anything like that. Oh yeah, and at regular intervals, as you travel along, a small gap appears in your line. With me so far? Good. Now things get tricky, because on the screen at the same time are other lines. (There can be up to six altogether, either human- or computer-controlled). Run into a line and you will stop/die. Run through any gaps in the lines, either your own or the other players and you will score a point. You will also score a point when another line stops/dies. All you have to do to win is score 30 points. Oh yeah, and as the other lines stop/die the speed increases. In other words, it's Tron, only more complicated.

It's all very lovely to play, and with a couple of players hogging the keyboard it can get quite intense as well. The computer players are also intelligent without being impossible to play against. There are some nice Star Trek: The Next Generation samples and other sound effects to round things off nicely and make it entertaining.

In one-player mode the game loses some of it's edge, but the fun to be had in multi-player mode is immense, and this is a great all-round game.

THE VERDICT:

Simple and compelling with enough options to play around with and an excellent multi-player option. Get it. ★★★★★

HOT NUMBERS

17 Bit

Blimey, my head's hurting after playing this. I can tell you. It's a sort of puzzle/tactical numbers game, and you really need to concentrate to get good at it.

There's this big square grid, and on each individual square of this grid is a number (from one to 11). You choose to play either horizontally or vertically and then start the game. Now pick a square and that number will be added to or taken away from your score. (Green ones add points, red ones take them away.) Then it's the turn of player two (a mate or the computer), and so on. The tactical part of the game comes in choosing your number. If you're playing horizontally for example, the number you pick only allows your opponent the opportunity to choose from the corresponding vertical column. You've got to look several moves in advance and try to figure out the best way to score points for yourself while giving your opponent as little chance as possible. Win the game and the grid will reveal a picture of a nice little anime Japanese girlie. Then you move onto the next level with a similar prize if you beat your opponent again. And so on, and so on. It's easy to control, although the mouse can be a little over-sensitive, and as such easy to play. Not stunning, but still a break from the usual stuff.

THE VERDICT:

Converted from the NES, it's a tactical little game that's not too hard but not too easy either. A break from the norm.

PUNTER V2.0

F1 Licenceware

Like horses do you? And, if so, do you like betting on them as well? Well, if you've answered yes to the last two questions (and you're old enough) then just visit your local licensed betting establishment and play away. Or fake it with a pen, some paper, pretend money and Grandstand on a Saturday afternoon.

Whichever you decide to do, it's going to be a helluva lot more fun than playing this. Welcome to Punter. Version two, I'll have you know.

You start the game with £10,000, and through various options (betting, buying or selling horses, loans and the like) you've got to make money. There are tons of horses, jockeys, courses, distances and conditions to take into account before you make your decision, but after the first couple of goes it all slides horribly down the slippery sloop of boredom. You predictably lose all your money in the same way (betting on the wrong horse), the horses you buy take ages to race (and all the time you're waiting to see if you can win any money, you're paying interest on the money you needed to borrow in order to buy the horse) and the tipster. Hrmph! He might as well just use a pin to predict the outcome of the races – his success rate would probably improve.

The game isn't trying to be a simulation, so it scores no merit points there and it's not a very interesting game either. It's difficult to see why anyone would actually sit down and play it for more than five minutes. Unless they have to review the damn thing, of course.

THE VERDICT: Slow, dull, and annoying at times. The only fun you'll get from the game is from putting all your money on one horse and just 'going for it'. Of course, you lose and it's game over, but it's still fun. A bit. ★

CAPTAIN CARNAGE: ALIEN EXTERMINATOR

F1 Licenceware

Alien Breeder more like. Yes, it's time once again for a PD game to pay 'homage' to a classic (or insanely popular) Amiga game. This time it's those Alien Breed things where you view the action from a top-down point of view (as if you we're stuck to a very high ceiling) with the aim of the game being to kill everyone or thing you come across.

The simple blasting action is great fun, and although the game doesn't have that many new thrills (the graphics are samey throughout and there's not much in the way of animation), what you're getting for your money is great stuff. The levels are also obscenely large, and even a good few hours of play only saw me getting something like 40% of level one completed. With cash and keys to pick up, computers to interact with (so that you can upgrade your equipment and buy all sorts of other useful items) and a real challenge in actually getting anywhere, although you do progress as you play, Captain Carnage (great name) is a slick, fast and enjoyable blast that shows exactly what PD is all about. This is the most fun I've had in ages. Well since Christmas, anyway. (Or, surely, since Viper on the previous page. – Ed)

THE VERDICT: Fast and enjoyable with lots of blasting. Things can get a little on the repetitive side, and there's no two-player mode which is annoying. Still, it's a laugh. ★★★½

"SITTING ON DISPLAY"

Dear AMIGA POWER,
Bleep-bleep, bleep-bleep, bleep-bleep. God I hate that noise, but not on that chilly morning! I jumped out of bed, dressed and went outside. I got onto my bike and was up the steep hill to the papershop in minutes. I did my paper round and collected my pay. At last I could afford it! I rode home to collect the rest of my hard-earned cash, then hopped onto a bus. I simply couldn't wait to get to that shop...

There it was, sitting on display, gleaming! I pushed my way through the crowd towards it. The price was high, but what the heck? As soon as I got it home, I turned on my new CD32 and loaded up my second new game, my new baby. It took ages to load. "It must be massive," I thought. It was! A massive pile of poop that is.

Oh why did I buy it? Why did I believe all the hype? Why didn't I save my money? Thankfully, there's a happy ending, as I took it back to the shop. "It hasn't even been played," I lied. "So why has it got fingerprints on the CD?" asked the man in the shop. "Erm, I think my mum tried it out," I lied for the second time.

In the end, I swapped it for UFO, which is excellent, so before you buy trash like Rise of the Robots, wait until you've read the review in AP. It makes sense.

Robert Bennett, Reading.

A cautionary tale indeed, but as you said, one with a happy ending. DON'T be rash and hasty, DON'T rush out and buy a game as soon as it appears in the shops, DON'T get burned by softies cashing in on your support. Read the review in AMIGA POWER and we will be good and true to you. After all, would we lie to you?

This also arrived through the post at AP towers this month. We agree. Completely.

"I BELIEVE THEY WORK"

Dear AP,
I want to know the name of Lucifer's company. The company who had the gall to wish you an untimely death. HOW DARE THEY? Anyway, I think I know who these morons are. I believe they work in the north of England. In Manchester. In Castlefield.

Ian Brown, Crewe.

Wrong.

"AMIGA IS IN SHAMBLES"

Dear AP,
The Amiga is in shambles. Why has a once world-beating machine been seconded by practically everything on the market? Is it because of your tendency to have an increasing amount of A1200 only coverdisks (Grr. - Ed), which I won't bother moaning about in depth? Is it due to piracy? No, 'cos the PC has pirates and look where it is now.

No, one of the main culprits is Commodore. They flop because they don't advertise (much, anyway), get "saved" by Commodore UK, who in turn are destined to flop because they...guess what ladies and gentlemen? The CD32 is a fine machine and the Critical Zone pack is great, but who's buying the CD32? People who are already Amiga owners, that's who. The same people keep buying the new Amigas, and these are the loyal user base that stopped Commodore flopping a long time ago. What Commodore need to do is tell the console owners how great the CD32 is.

We've had it all this month. A torrent of abuse for Sensible has resulted in Stuart Campbell hastily erecting an umbrella to shield himself. Steve's hard drive has been filled with emails. And the usual flood of incoherent rambling has arrived on our doormat. Blimey.

● Address your letters to: Do The Write Thing, AMIGA POWER, 30 Monmouth Street, Bath BA1 2BW. Or 'netsurf' us at: ampower@futurenet.co.uk.

Some of these people still think the Mega-CD is a good idea, so they won't be hard to convince. I mean, doing better than the last CD32 advert (where you see about two seconds of "gameplay" - the naff Microcosm) won't exactly be mindbogglingly difficult.

The second factor is that "cute" little video game icon, the mascot. Sega have had Sonic, and Nintendo have had Mario for quite some time now, so the Amiga can't really compete on the arcade game front. The Amiga needs a mascot more badly than it ever has done before, as all its potential mascots - Zool, James Pond, Cannon Fodder, etc, have defected to the consoles. Something original, more than anything else, is needed, preferably a supposed technical achievement. Look at Sonic - the Mega Drive isn't anything special. Look at Doom on the PC - it isn't even real 3D, let alone virtual reality. It's all about fooling the public and lying, something which Commodore do to us existing Amiga owners, so why can't they do it when it counts? After all, it's for their own good.

Yours a bit annoyedly,
Jon Le Mottee, Chester

"SCALE OF INCOMPETENCE"

Dear People,
Do us all a favour - the Amiga community, that is. Try getting real...really! Floppy disk piracy will always be a problem on all computer formats, but you don't see major software houses stopping writing games for the PC. You can't blame Sensible and the like for abandoning the Amiga. The reason for this is that Commodore have seen to it that very soon, there won't be an Amiga to write for. They have mismanaged their affairs in a manner that's breathtaking in its scale of incompetence. The first, most popular, most advanced home computer bar none is now set to become history. This could not have been achieved without the most prolonged and persistent management failure imaginable.

So...DON'T YOU DARE blame a handful of cheats for software companies deserting the machine. Comments in the mag such as "We told you so" are misinformed, ingenuous and completely untrue. So like I said, do us all a favour, stick to what you're good at - game reviews - and leave the serious stuff alone to people who know what they're talking about.

Yours faithfully,
Derek Evans, Bristol

"FIGHTER THINGY FLIES OVER THEM"

Dear AP,
In AP45 you told us not to go and see Stargate because it's terrible. WHY is it so bad? I've only seen the trailer and it looks quite good, especially when that sand/space/fighter thingy flies over them. I know you are always right about these things but please tell us why it's so poor. Yours faithfully,
A Coventry Family.

Banal dialogue, nonsensical plot-holes, absurdly pompous music, lax editing, interminable shots of crowds of people milling about in the desert...Stargate isn't just bad, it's embarrassing, and undoubtedly the worst film any of us have seen for at least ten years. Many people walked out halfway through the preview showing we went to. And yet, incredibly, we haven't read a single bad review of it. Barry Norman summarised it as harmless fun, and even the normally-reliable Empire gave it three stars and concluded that it "swings along with a committed gusto rarely seen since the heyday of George Lucas". What's going on? Has the nation fallen victim to some sinister brain-washing plot, one which we were mighty enough to resist? Or what?

"FOUR 90 MINUTE TAPES FILLED"

Dear AP,
I noticed while reading your guide to writing a letter printed ages ago, that you told us innocent readers not to say anything like "I bet you won't print this letter" as that's exactly what you'd then do. So I'd just like to say - If you don't print this letter I will personally come down to Bath and stick black paper all over your light bulbs so that instead of getting light when you switch them on, it'll actually get darker. I hope that clears that up. ➤

IT'S...THE INEVITABLE SENSIBLE BACKLASH

It seems that the people we thought could do no wrong finally have. Done a wrong, that is. Amid the complete absence of letters praising SWOS and CF2, we've received a whole bunch of very long letters slamming them. Read these edited highlights and ponder this: Could the honeymoon finally be over between Sensible and their adoring fans?

"BUGGER THE KANGAROO"

Gooooo Morning AP!
Having just purchased AP45, a few comments:

What is this I see proudly displayed on the first coverdisk? What tempting treat is presented to us long suffering punters, having just returned our copies of Cannon Fodder 2 to the shops by pretending it was an unwanted Christmas gift? We few, we happy few? Four more levels of unplayable purple nastiness, that's what.

You're wasting your time with a CF2 guide, as nobody is a-playing it. Not 'cos it's too hard - I speak as someone who can finish the original with 100+ men, but because it's so boring. Relentless attacks by numberless enemies is NOT more exciting - it's merely monotonous. By the time you've worked out which blobs are your men, there are none left alive, and unless you're alive you can't play, and if you don't play...

And the whole thing looks so ugly, and takes ages to load, and isn't hard disk installable and is completely lacking in atmosphere - the people responsible deserve to be shot without trial, bugger Kangaroo Court. The game was obviously cobbled together by 'someone' who totally fails to understand the appeal of the original CF.

And another thing: You should have a new feature called "The games we want to see" which would naturally begin with my own magnificent Cannon Fodder - The Great War, but would also include ideas from other readers as well as from you lot. Okay, so we're not likely to see them appear on the Amiga, but where else are the games of the 21st Century going to come from if not from the fertile-futile-furtive minds of we happy few? The decline of the Amiga has coincided with a year which failed to produce a single significant original game on ANY system. Since software developers seem bankrupt of ideas, it's up to us to keep the dream alive. You're doing a man's job, sirs, Theobald Von Betmann-Hollweg, North Humberside

"AESTHETIC HADES OF MAUVENESS"

Dear Mr Faragher,

I am writing to you, self-evidently.

On a second point, will you please pass on to Cambium Winstanley my best wishes. Pat him on the back. Hug the man long and close, in an intimate, yet both perfectly secure in your sexuality kind of way. Thank you. Thank you for being tactile on my behalf, because I need to let him know just how right he is about the Alien levels of Cannon Fodder 2 - as seen on your cover disk. He's spot on about this aesthetic Hades of mauveness appearing as a torn finger nail on the eye, and electrodes being applied to the testicles of atmosphere.

I suggest that he teach Sensible a lesson by steadfastly refusing to increase his already horizonless personal fortune by bringing out a CF2 playing guide, thereby:

- Denying Sensible extra publicity and Mr Hare the chance of getting his face in every magazine on Earth.
- Not adding in any way to the LIES AND TREACHERY in which the world is already nostril-deep.
- Avoiding all that business with The Sun and the Daily Star wanting to name him.
- Gaining the knowledge that he can bear to look in the eyes of any Camelopard Winstanley Jnr who may appear in the future.

Anyway, Davy sends love to you all for the AP T-shirt you sent after my last letter. His little eyes welled up, he stroked the latest issue of AP and his voice cracked as he murmured, "Now I'm a believer." Predictably, Mike Nesmith, a hugely successful business executive in Wolverhampton now, apparently.

"IT BEGGARS BELIEF"

Dear loves,
What the hell has come over Sensible Software in the last few months, and is it related to the arrival of games playing guru Stuart Campbell? I'm talking about the HUGE jump in difficulty in the CF2 and SWOS games, for although I'm not brilliant at games, I managed to get to level 12 in the original CF before getting bogged down, and I'm good enough to beat Germany using San Marino in Sensi, so imagine my frustration when I can't make any progress beyond level four in CF2.

Now it's all well and good making the second game more difficult, but why didn't they either tell Joe Public that it would be more tricky or release it as a form of upgrade for seasoned fodderites? Games should tempt you in, the learning curve should tease you to get you just a little bit further rather than just shutting you out.

Personally, the only levels I've found interesting have been the desert ones (although I obviously haven't seen many) - your review was quite right about the Alien levels, so ignore Stuart's petulance. When push comes to shove, it's just not worth what we're being expected to pay, and I've abandoned it and gone back to the original, basically because it's more fun to play.

What about SWOS then? Well, it's such a tragedy, I could cry. All Sensible had to do was park the tactics and management section on the original Sensi game engine, and then watch the accolades and cash come flooding in. But what happens? For some reason, they decided to tinker with the actual football game itself, and now the game's so difficult that it beggars belief, even for a seasoned Sensi player like myself. I loaded it up and prepared to play my beloved Liverpool against Blackburn, and then lost 7-2. As a player manager in Division Three (which the manual suggested is the best way to start the game), I won one of the first 15 games, having scored six goals and conceding 50, including two 10-0 thrashings from Man Utd. Not a very good introduction to the world's greatest soccer game, is it?

As much as I hate to think any nasty thoughts about Sensible Software, I can't help but get the feeling that SWOS was rush-released for Christmas without actually being play-tested thoroughly. The demo from a couple of months ago actually played like the original, so what changed? At the end of the day, Brian, I just think the Sensible boys stand a real chance of alienating their customers/fans. Which is, obviously, not a good thing.

Paul Fillery, Worcester

"YOU CAN CONTINUE YOUR CAREER"

Dear AMIGA POWER
Maybe my copy of SWOS is bugged, but I've found that if you get sacked, you can continue your career WITH THE SAME TEAM the next season just by going to the continue career option, but only if you've got a job offer.

Tom Kench, Essex

In the face of such massive and lengthy criticism, we thought it only right to give Sensible a right to reply. So here's ex-AP Dep Ed and CF2 designer Stuart Campbell:

● Price. A fair cop, guv. We think 30 quid is too much as well, and we'd have preferred to see it as a data disk, but decisions like that rest entirely in the hands of the game's publishers, Virgin. Might sound like a cop-out to you, but it's the truth. Anyway, from the day of release, CF2 was selling for £19.99, so if you paid £30 for it, more fool you.

● The difficulty of Sensible Soccer. Experienced Sensi players regularly racked up scores of 20-0 and more, and when we took the game round the magazines to preview it, the single overwhelming bit of feedback we got was 'Make the goalies tougher'. Yes, the game's harder now, but it's still beatable. OF COURSE Exeter got thrashed by Manchester United, you utter buffoon. OF COURSE their players aren't as fit or as talented.

● The difficulty of CF2. The predominant feature of the levels in CF2 (and I should know, since I designed them) is that there are usually two ways to do them. The obvious, difficult, stupid way, and the clever way. Try thinking like a bit more of a tricky trickster and you might start to get somewhere. Cam spotted this in his review. I'm surprised I have to tell you again.

● People 'new to the whole Cannon Fodder experience'? Like who? It was almost impossible to buy any kind of Amiga hardware over the recent Christmas period. Almost everybody who's bought CF2 (or SWOS, come to that) was already familiar with the game(s), both of them having been permanent fixtures in the upper reaches of the charts since they were released one year and two-and-a-half years ago respectively.

● And please, can we stop all acting so surprised that CF2 uses the same engine and gameplay as the original. We said, from the word go, until we were blue in the face, that it would be so. Stuart Campbell, Sensible Software

DO THE write thing

Congratulations on being the mightiest beings ever to produce a computer magazine, and keep up the good work. But game music – tool of the devil? Come on. Are you serious? Why did you only cover the seriously crap music in your feature and not any of the even slightly good music? Have you ever listened to any of the tracks from Lotus 3? That has to be some of the best music ever featured on the Amiga, and other classics include Assassin, Project X and Pinball Dreams and Fantasies. Come on, you play games for a living, don't tell me you never listen to any of the music.

I have a very large selection of games and lots of them have respectable, if not very listen-to-able music and (Saaaad!, I hear you cry) I have in fact taped most of them and now have at least four 90 minute tapes filled with game music.

Oh, and you forgot to print a W on the spine of January's AP.

David Burgess, Derby

We listen to computer game music all the time, which is how we know that it's terrible. Would you listen to a minute-long version of an Erasure song over and over again for two hours at a time? Well, in your case, you probably would, but the rest of the world wouldn't, which is why we applaud sound effects and both hate and fear game music.

"THE CHEEKY SPINE"

Dear AP,
Wow, surely AP44 was the grungiest, moodiest, cyberpunkiest and downright blackest cover ever? As I see it, it is the symbol of attitude. But anyway...

Once upon a time, there was a lad (me) who was sitting in his room just leisurely leafing through his old APs and reading the cheeky spine messages – "You know ... for kids", "hookah hookah hookah chakka", "Bob is a hamster" and the one obviously referring to Steve 'Hardware' McGill's departure to Amiga

Format, "The man's an oaf." (Wrong. – Ed)

Just when he wanted to put them back in the Golden Box of Good Things, he saw that he had accidentally piled them up in reverse order. He noticed this because all of the spine letters didn't form the usual 'AMIGA POWER AMIGA POWER' that he had grown so used to in the course of time, but instead read 'REWOP AGIMA REWOP AGIMA.'

Startled by this miraculous event, he stumbled to the other end of the room and took his Indian encyclopedia out of his Mighty Rack of Learned Literature, and leafed until he found what he sought. Rewop agima – ancient Indian spell meaning "Send your sister to a Liberian slave trader, set your parental residence alight and smoke some ("Iguana" – Ed) while hanging from a bridge on a rubber band of excessive length." Blimey. Yours nicely,

Thijs Vissia, Apeldoorn, Holland

"RUBBISH TO A MOUNTAIN"

Dear AMIGA POWER,
As my old manager said to us at half time: "Come on lads, your standard has dropped. You're letting yourself slip away. I KNOW you can do better than this – you know YOURSELF you can do a whole lot better. Go out there and prove to me, to yourself and to your fans that you HAVE NOT croaked. Go and win!"

This talk turned us from a pile of rubbish to a mountain of strength. We had just been relegated to the second division and were trailing 2-nil at home to Barnsley. We drew the match 2-2 in the end, but had it not been for that great speech by our manager, we would have been stuffed.

I believe that his words will help you to make AMIGA POWER great once more. As your standards over the last 12 months have slipped, and you are beginning to fall into the same category as the other computer mags.

His words helped me to help Manchester United, we were promoted after that season and I can only hope it will have the same affect on you. Good luck. Of course, I will always continue to read AMIGA POWER, but a few improvements WILL make you into champions once more, instead of also-rans. I believe by the way that at 77, I may be your oldest reader, but I also know of at least four others who are over 65 and also read your magazine.

Samuel Batley, Isle of Wight

No, hang on, come back. Our standards have slipped? Standards of what? Improvements? To what? Eh? We'd love to help, but unless you tell us specifically what's wrong we're powerless to act – or, indeed, to consider that we've been criticised at all. Blimey, this is like reading a review in one of the other computer mags.

"LAUREN FROM NEIGHBOURS"

Dear AP,
Here's a picture of Lauren from Neighbours I took at the True Lies premier in London. She wanted my phone number but I can't be having all these super star women pestering me. You must know how it is. From one great person to eight great people. Barrie, Mason, Tooting.

"PITY ABOUT THE NOSE"

Some of you seem to be getting a teensy bit carried away by this email malarkey...

04/01/95

2.27pm

I won a Star Letter prize once in Your Sinclair. The prize – three games – never arrived. I phoned up. Jon Boy Davies answered and said they were in the post...they never arrived.

Boo Hoo.

pl@soton.ac.uk

2.28pm

Ha! And you thought SHE (Miss Rees) was a problem...email doesn't cost anything and I can do it all day at work. Haha! Tell Jon Boy he had better give me a freelance reviewer's job or I'll start sending him letters with Program Pitstop Listings. Yes, I remember Jon Boy's cheerful, cheeky-chappy face peering out of the titles for Your Sinclair's type-in program section. Remember those? No, don't print any more of Isabelle Rees' letters. She's very weird.

pl@soton.ac.uk

2.36pm

I'm slightly worried now. That piccy of Cam in the latest issue. Let's compare: Cam: 6'5", Me: 6'5"

Cam: Slightly sticky-out ears, Me: Slightly sticky-out ears.

Cam: Youthful looks, Me: Youthful looks.

Cam: Er, not sure...looks like red-gingery-brown hair. Me: Red-gingery-brown hair.

Cam: Likes violent games, Me: Likes violent games.

I'm very worried indeed. And Cam should be as well. To quote someone...Pleekers!

pl@soton.ac.uk

2.46pm

Are you lot still skiving off on your Christmas hols? Rise of the Robots...it's a bit cack, isn't it?

pl@soton.ac.uk

2.57pm

You bunch of liars. Tower Assault is the best Alien Breed yet. For 20 quid, it's brilliant. You're just crap.

pl@soton.ac.uk

05/01/95

9.57am

Blimey, Ensign Ro was a bit of a looker, eh lads? Pity about the nose.

pl@soton.ac.uk

9.58am

Do you ever answer this crap or do you do an Amiga Format and receive email but never reply?

pl@soton.ac.uk

3.11pm

How come I knew about Alien Breed 3D four months before you did?

Hmm?

pl@soton.ac.uk

You didn't. Now be quiet.

"AM I RIGHT?"

I reckon the phone call you printed in ish 43 was made by a member of a programming team whose name begins with "T" and ends in "eam 17". Am I right?

Colin Meney, Ayreshire

"BICYCLE FROM THE MAGIC"

Dear AP,
I'm writing on behalf of my family to publicly disown my brother. In public. He was the gibbering lunatic who wrote a grumpy letter in AP45 about the number of seconds till Christmas. He asked "How sad can you get?"

I'm sure millions of readers agreed with him about Christmas coming so early, but feel that they should be told that:

1. He proudly boasted in early November that he'd finished his Christmas shopping.
2. The closest he got to Christmas shopping on Christmas eve was...well, not very close. Nowhere near in fact.
3. And on the subject of sad, he has a hilarious but horribly offensive beardy face. Fuzzy of face, fuzzy of mind, I always say.

4. He drives a Ford Fiesta. A white Ford Fiesta with white wheels. Although "drives" is stretching the term a bit far. It's more of a Fred Flintstone-type experience, with his legs whirling away just before he sets off. Slowly.

Slower even than Mr MacHenry's whizzy bicycle from the Magic Roundabout.

So he's been disowned for being sad. We weren't related anyway, because I was swapped at the hospital.

Yours incidentally,

Michael Donlevy, Harrow.

CANNON FODDER

THE OFFICIAL PLAYING GUIDE

Travel to strange and exotic countries. Meet interesting people of ancient cultures. Then kill them. That's what Cannon Fodder's all about. But this kind of high body-count genocide requires much, much more than an itchy trigger finger and a willingness to shed blood for little or no reason.

You need THE OFFICIAL CANNON FODDER GUIDE, packed with hints, tips and a complete solution. Relinquish your moral obligations by following detailed instructions to the very end of the game, and then claim you "were only following orders." It worked for Lt William Calley, and hey, it might just work for you.

SYNDICATE

THE OFFICIAL PLAYING GUIDE

Cities are big. Cities are scary. Cities would be much more fun if you could stroll along the streets with four special pals armed to the teeth with mini-guns and flamethrowers. If only real life was a bit more like Syndicate, right kids?

Taking over the world's never easy, which is why disgraced ex-AMIGA POWER writer Richard Longhurst has packed out 165 pages with complete solutions to all the Syndicate missions PLUS the American Revolt data disk. All hail Rich Longhurst! All hail the powerful iron-fisted benevolence of the Corporation!

In the sulphurous cavern that is our office we are chained. We writhe in anguish at every bad game that arrives. We rattle our manacles and hop gleefully at every good one. We KNOW. Trust us.

THE BOTTOM LINE

(AND HOW TO UNDERSTAND IT)

★★★★★ PLEASES us GREATLY ★★★★★ PLEASES us
★★★★ Imperfect BUT GOOD ★★ Mediocre
★★ We are IRRITATED ★ DESPICABLE

The whole point of The Bottom Line is to cram as much information as possible into this small space. Here's how it works...
The top bit is easy:
GAME NAME
Publisher Price

Then we get (just for your information really) the issue of AMIGA POWER in which the game was originally reviewed, the mark it got at the time, and the reviewer's initials. If the game appeared in our new All Time Top 100, its position comes next, followed by the mini-review and a final rating out of five stars (with red ones to show which ones are real 'must buys'). And there you have it - all you could ever possibly need to know about just about every full price game that you're even slightly likely to think about buying.

ALADDIN

Virgin £30

AP44 86% JD
A handsome conversion of the Mega Drive game, which plays slickly and breaks up the platform stuff with a couple of chase levels and bonus games. But, like all these post-Cool Spot platforms, Aladdin suffers from a severe lack of longevity. It's highly impressive while it lasts though.

ALL-NEW WORLD OF LEMMINGS

AP46 50% JN
Peculiar re-embrace of the sadistically fussy original Lemms rather than the make-amends sequel. Larger graphics, less icons and only three lemming tribes because Psychonosis say you told them Lemms 2 was too complicated; pixel-perfect lemming positioning, exactly overlapping lemming hordes and dictatorially precise cursor control because that's what Lemms is all about, right? The 'all-new' parts are ability-replacing collectable objects (a terrific idea) and rampaging monsters (a terrible one). Lemms 2 is much more fun.

APOCALYPSE

Virgin £30

AP37 80% SC
It's Choplifter for the '90s. A straightforward and old-fashioned arcade game. It's got pretty scenery, realistic little men to shoot and hostages to rescue and loads of different power-ups to collect. In fact, it conjures up the image of the best Vietnam movie you've never seen. There're only five levels and a limited number of strategies to employ, so it may not have the lastability expected of a game costing thirty quid, but you're only going to finish it in one night if you stay up all night and go bleary-eyed, that's for sure.

ARCADE POOL

Team 17 £10

AP38 91% JD
It's just like being down the pub with all the lads from Team 17. Only better. Options galore, and great computer opponents. Best of all, check out the Speed Pool.

ARMOUR-GEDDON 2

AP37 57% CW
A tactical war game set in a post-apocalyptic desert or something. You've got to race against time to avoid being slaughtered by a load of genetically deficient mutants from Dundee, or somewhere equally exciting as that. To avoid this embarrassingly horrific scenario, you've got to mine valuable ore that allows you to build tanks and other weapons systems. Control is icky and overly pedantic. Expect predictably high marks from other magazines 'cos it looks good.

★★

BANSHEE A1200

Core £26

AP39 89% CW
SWIV with planes, or 1942 with helicopter and jeep but with planes, or Dragon Spirit with planes but with helicopter and jeep but with planes.

And good. Graphically quite beautiful in an attractively nasty way (you get to strafe ground troops, who clutch their chests, look up with infinitely sad eyes then jet blood and crumple to the floor) and supremely playable. There are only four levels (the reason it's not a 90%+) but they're long ones, and slightly wider than the screen (so you can dodge around SWIV fashion). Plenty of power-ups which are highly selectable, plenty of monsters that are alarmingly competent and altogether rather a lot more fun than that. And no in-game music. Yippee.

BATMAN RETURNS

Gametek £15

AP36 15% SC
Mind-alteringly unpleasant beat-'em-up with appallingly little control and truly shoddy graphics. Harder than Project-X, but without the saving grace of looking nice into the bargain. You'll never see level three, largely because you'll have died of boredom and won't be bothered to get there.

BATTLETOADS

Mindscape £20

AP42 9% RP
Neatly varied but otherwise 91% terrible multi-stage beat-'em-up. ★

BENEFACITOR

Psychonosis £26

AP39 57% CW
Basically sound Lemmings-ish platform game marred by preposterously (and needlessly) small graphics. It's not as if you have to see so far ahead or anything (and anyway there's an option to scroll the screen if you really feel the need). The argument is that the tiny graphics mean huge levels of vast complexity, which is true, but a brimming mugful of gnawingly stupid flaws whack the gameplay full-bloodedly over the head until it stops squirming feebly and dies. Try these: unsportable traps. Unavoidable monsters. Long falls that kill you. No restart points. Levels that reset when you lose. Mmm. Benefactor is only for people who find the idea of trying to jump on to a moving ledge using a control method whereby you hold down fire to jump in a parabolic curve and let go to drop like a weighty rock marvellously appealing.

★★

THE BLUE AND THE GREY

Impressions £35

AP36 66% SF
Everyday American Civil War wargame, notable only for a strange habit of always making one side much stronger than the other. Dull.

BRIAN THE LION

AP37 42% SC
If you made a list of everything you hated about cute character platform games, then compiled another list of things you really really hated about platform games, you'd be shocked to realise that Brian the Lion possesses just about every single category on both lists. It's a shame really. Brian tries really hard to overcome the handicap, his platform world is beautiful and possesses some neat hardware tricks, but it's all to no avail. The lame gameplay is just too much for Brian to overcome, the poor little love. ★

BUBBLE AND SQUEAK A1200

AP40 77% JN
Superior platform game with splendid graphics and unexpectedly good music that involves shooting a stupid blue thing to faraway places so he can help you get across that one dangerous bit. Large (but never empty), varied (there are bonus levels, hidden bits and a shoot-'em-up sub-game) and really very good fun indeed, it's tragically spoiled by needlessly tricky mechanics (it's all too easy for the blue thing to blunder off a ledge when following you) and a foolish hurry-up feature which fills the level with water, so if you make a mistake near the end of a screen, you drown.

BUBBLE AND SQUEAK A500

Audiogenic £26

AP45 83% JN
Properly taking note of the criticisms of the A1200 version, Audiogenic have substantially increased the fun factor by beefing up Stupid Blue Thing's intelligence levels to a point where he no longer falls from a ledge if, for instance, he feels like it. Uses the CD32 joypad as well. But the watery time limit's still too nasty.

BUMP 'N' BURN

Grandslam £26

AP40 70% SM
A great idea - Mario Kart in the style of Wacky Races - comes apart at the seams due to an inability to grasp what made Mario Kart such fun in the first place. The tracks are too long so you spend ages scenery-watching, the competitors bunch together so you spend a few more ages scenery-watching, and you don't even need to use the comedy power-ups as you can pass the other cars by flooring the accelerator. Er, only to see them retaliate by strangely and suspiciously stumbling across convenient turbo-chargers. Mmm. Expensively disappointing.

BURNTIME

AP40 74% SM
Ugly strategy game involving traipsing around a post-apocalyptic desert and gathering a happy band that will have some chance of survival. It's sort of *Mad Max*ish (but without the vehicles), sort of Duney (but without the spice stuff), a bit unfair (you'll get killed a lot before you find out where everything is) and endorsed by Greenpeace. It is fun, though. Sort of.

★★★

CANNON FODDER 2

AP44 89% CW
Disappointingly, a data disk rather than a sequel, and one that inexplicably takes our muddled, terrified heroes out of the grimly realistic warzones where they belong and shoehorns them into an implausible time-travelling plot. The quality of the levels isn't affected – the design is consistently better than the original's, and it's far more of a tricky trickster – but fighting blobby aliens on blazingly purple planets 'feels' wrong for the game. Rather more importantly, Cannon Fodder 2 is outrageously expensive considering there's nothing new in there at all. It's still brilliant, but pointedly less so. ★★★★★

CHARLIE J COOL

Raspunit £20

AP43 45% PM

CLIFFHANGER

Paygnosis £15

AP39 19% SF
The world's worst film licence. ★

CLOCKWISER

Raspunit £13

AP40 79% JA
Bricky puzzle game where you have to rotate blocks to recreate a given pattern before time runs out while dealing with the usual complement of bombs, traps, indestructible walls and teleporters. Expectedly shoddy graphics, typically annoying gameplay, unsurprisingly terrible learning curve and predictably addictive. Almost Lego X, really. But not quite. ★★

CLUB FOOTBALL: THE MANAGER

Teque £30

AP43 52% PM
A 2%-above-average football management game. ★

THE CLUE

AP43 60% JD
Who remembers Dodgy Geezers? (They're only nice lads at heart.) They Stole a Million? Well, here's the Amiga version. Recruit a gang, burglar a building and get away with it, but spend most of your time in taxis and ruing the controls. It's a Germanish text adventure disguised as a point-and-click, and it's only the fact they didn't convert Dodgy Geezers or They Stole a Million that stirs up interest. ★★

COMPLETE CHESS SYSTEM

Oxford Softworks £35

AP45 81% SF
Chess. ★★★★★

CRYSTAL DRAGON

Black Legend £30

AP44 38% PM
Pick an RPG, any RPG – it's more than likely to be better than this redundant Dungeon Master clone. ★★

D-DAY

AP40 51% JD
Impressions seem bizarrely proud of their jealously guarded Micro Miniatures construction kit, and here's another wargame to make Dave Golder so glad it hasn't been released in a SEUCK-like manner. Every popularly held prejudice against wargames is confirmed by D-Day, and it takes as its starting point the day of the landings, so robbing you of any chance to do it yourself. (Surely the main attraction for restaging historic battles). Barely passable for fans of brain-haemorrhagingly tedious number-crunching, slightly more tolerable if you also enjoy playing with impossibly small graphics that are the same colour as the main map. ★

DARKMERE

AP37 69% JD
It's an RPG with no distinguishing characteristics other than pretty graphics. The main focus of the game though, rather than the pretty graphics, is the menu system which you use to issue commands and the like. The plot is weaker than standard RPGs (which are usually weaker than a weak thing) and that is basically the game's downfall. Staunch RPG fans will love it for the cute edible bunny rabbits. ★★

DRACULA

Paygnosis £20

AP39 14% JD
The world's other worst film licence. ★

DRAGONSTONE

AP46 49% CW
SNES Zelda, but on the Amiga, and rubbish. Here be regenerating monsters that always hit you due to the intermittently effective combat system, obvious mazes and stupid collision detection that mean, say, a mushroom clearly not in your path at all (and yet somehow so) forces you to go all the way around the map to reach the other side, puzzles of the dead end/old herbalist/present collected herb/receive travel spell school, secret areas essential to the game and an uninviting sword-and-strawberry plot. Take it or take it not; we care for neither. ★★

DREAM WEB

Empire £35

AP46 24% JN
Disastrous 'adult' futuristic point-and-click in which every screen is cluttered with tiny objects, all of which belabour you with a lengthy text description before you're allowed to see whether they're of any use. Very The Clue-like in that it's really a verb-noun text adventure in disguise, but greatly more stupidly obscure in its puzzle solutions. Typical of the hamfisted design is the gun you're illogically allowed to use only at certain points; typical of the storytelling is every hardened street-scum sub-human speaking like a slightly apologetic junior shop assistant. Really, the mystery of your character's madness is the only driving interest and you find that out on level two. ★

ELFMANIA

Renegade £26

AP39 61% SC

Pretty but vastly disappointing beat-'em-up with no sense of weight to the characters and a perfectly dreadful method of performing special moves that might as well light up a neon sign above your head saying, "Look out, other player – I'm about to perform a special move." There's a clever bit where you're fighting for money so you can hire a better character, but it all goes disastrously wrong in practice because the figures are fiddled to prevent you having a reasonable stable of fighters. And the tough people are so tough (and the weak ones so weak) that the fights are horribly unbalanced. The worst thing is, we said all this at the preview stage, but the programmers have taken not a jot of notice. Fools. ★★

EMBRYO

Black Legend £26

AP43 62% CW

Potentially staggering 3D flight sim (sort of like Guardian: ie, 3D Defender) which blows it completely by having monsters that are far, far too tough. It's amazing no one picked up on this – it really does kill the game stone dead. And there's all that attention to detail and the serial-link option as well. Wasted. Utterly, utterly wasted. The A1200 version scored 70% for additional speed, but it really just highlights the missed opportunity. ★★

EMPIRE SOCCER

Empire £26

AP40 90% SM
If Sensi is the big red Routemaster of football games, then Empi is the hardy commuter running along behind, forever off-balance and leaning forwards in a futile attempt to catch hold of the metal pole, never quite managing it but putting up a passenger-pleasing, sprinty try all the same. It's nothing at all like 'real' football, instead concentrating on top Robo Hunter story Football Crazy-like special moves such as banana shots which curve through 90° and powerdrives which horribly injure the keeper. The pitch is short and square, you can take out three people with a sliding tackle and it's riddled with small and endearing silly bugs (throw-ins and corners are more or less randomly allocated regardless of the team at fault), and it is, really and truly, Speedball 2 in shorts. There's no doubt about it, this is certainly one of the top five games of 1994. ★★★★★

FIELDS OF GLORY

Microprose £30 (£35 AGA)

AP44 61% CW
Waterloo wargame swathed in options and featuring an ingenious three-scale map system tempting you to follow single units instead of examining the Big Picture and so fall foul of the Fog Of War. But it blows it all horribly, because – insanely – the game doesn't take terrain into account. So you just run everybody straight at each other and see who crawls out alive. Mmmm. ★★

FLY HARDER

Buzz £10

AP36 90% CW
CD32 £15 72% SC
Great Thrust derivative that's included here despite being a budget game because (a) it's so good, and (b) it's an original CD32 game as well. Get it on floppy, though, because it's so ferociously hard that playing it with a keyboard is your only chance of success. ★★★★★

FOOTBALL GLORY

AP45 66% (68% A1200) PM
The coincidental Sensi lookalike that, while playing a largely acceptable game of 'football' (aside from the idiot play of having the computer opponents 'slip up' by rocketing the ball into their own net or something, rather than playing poorly) pales in comparison with SWOS. There are a collection of special moves are wasted because the computer teams don't give you time to set them up before legging it with the ball; the aftermath is madly sensitive; and the passing is problematically inaccurate. Interesting, but flawed. The AGA version's slightly faster, with better sound. ★★

GUARDIAN CD32

Acid Software £30

AP43 90% JD
Defender. In first-person 3D. On the CD32. Buy it. Because you know we're right. ★★★★★

HEIMDALL 2

AP37 79% SM
A 3D-isometric RPG which despite the hype and overly high scores in certain other magazines, does nothing to push back the bounds of this type of game; a major quest broken down into sub-quests which have to be completed before you can proceed. Some of the puzzles involved are simple, others are convoluted, and others are just downright impossible. It'll take a long time to complete, but doesn't offer enough to justify the exorbitant price of thirty five quid. ★★★★★

IMPOSSIBLE MISSION 2025

Microprose £35

AP39 75% SC
Not so much a sequel, more a game suspiciously similar to the round of uninspired platformers that came out about the same time as the first Impossible Mission. Microprose's infinite wisdom has it that the tightly focused, puzzle-oriented gameplay of the original was a Bad Thing, so Impossible Mission 2025 sprawls formlessly and concentrates on silly feats of leaping which are made pointlessly more difficult by the inflexible jump mechanism. What puzzles there are are more than slightly dull, and not even the new power-ups (like handy shields and a fab jetpack) enliven the action. Damnably, the most entertaining thing about this game is the C64-perfect original Impossible Mission you get with it. ★★

INCREDIBLE CRASH DUMMIES

Virgin £26

AP39 52% SM

ISHER 3

Daze £33

AP41 50% CW
Entirely uninspired first-person perspective RPG which is still living in 1985 (walk around some mazes, find someone, walk around some more mazes to find the object that someone wants, return it to be told someone else is waiting for you in another maze) and chokes any chance of excitement with barely noticeable character interaction (non-plot vital citizens are just scenery) and extremely dull fights. Does all the wrong stuff with external and hard drives as well. The fact you can load in your favourite party from the prequels sort of gives away the lack of interest in mass appeal, but that doesn't excuse the overwhelming tedium of it all. ★★

JAMES POND 3

Touted as 'the best platformer ever', this sadly fails to deliver. Although it's huge and there are loads of secret rooms which should offer loads of potential, it's very annoying to play. There's even a (dramatic gasp) slippery-slide ice world. No, no, no. ★★

JET STRIKE CD32

Kompart £26

AP42 81% CW

The control problems and disk accessing time, which foxed the original version's high-octane air-to-air and air-to-ground fireball antics, have here been eliminated, which is a Good Thing. The in-game tunes have been replaced by some actual musical numbers with singing and everything, which is a Crime Against Humanity. Apart from that, exactly the same mixture of disturbingly realistic plane specs (down to the engine noise, apparently) and laughingly hopeless handling. Charmingly PD (the programmer's obviously done everything, including graphics and speech) and, curiously, excellent fun. ★★★★★

JUNGLE STRIKE A1200

AP45 77% JN
Console action games are great. You switch them on, play them for a bit and then switch them off when you get bored. Jungle Strike is a conversion of the Mega Drive console action game, and they would have got away with it if it hadn't been for that meddling lack of depth. The 40 or so levels can't disguise their similarity beneath excited mission briefings; you're either flying off to shoot something, or to rescue someone. A couple of extra vehicles to commandeer here and there do break up the pattern (although you're just doing the same stuff but at a different height) but the tiring faults (like having to search minutely for your own fuel on later levels - a-ha ha ha) drag it down. A great console action game, and as such best taken in short doses. ★★★★★

K240

AP37 83% SM
Utopia got a good rating from AP first time round. K240 is basically Utopia 2. And what an improvement over the original it is. Sim-City meets Populous set in an asteroid cloud in space. Your job is to mine and explore the asteroids in sector K240. This would all be hunky dory and rather dull, apart from the fact that there are aliens out there set on blowing your plans and your asteroids to smithereens. It's a race to mine enough ore to build enough ships to go out there and push the enemy's face in. And there's nothing quite like the feeling of destroying the enemy's asteroids, that's for certain. ★★★★★

KICK OFF 3

Anco £26

AP40 69% SM
At least they've tried to be different: the absence of Dino Dini has also spelled the end of the pinbally feel to this series. But it's all a bit of a mess. The game forces you to use a two-button joystick (otherwise you can't pass accurately), the scrolling is genuinely sickeningly jerky, the graphics and 'feel' are hugely shabby (silence when you score, laughably inappropriate animation, no second drive recognition and the muddled front end spring easily to mind) and you just want to be playing Wembley International Soccer for the whole time you're squabbling with it. ★★

They said it couldn't be done, but it jolly well could you know because A500/600/1200 owners with 1.3 mb of free RAM can now play Tony Crowther's CD32 blockbuster from humble floppies. Apart from the sound, there's very little discernible difference between the CD32 and A1200 versions, and although the non-AGA machines simplify the graphics somewhat, the massive city with its captivating gameplay (cheers) remains pretty much intact. ★★★★★

LION KING

Yes, you've heard the line hundreds of times before, but this time we're using it and we're great, so shut up. This game's graphics are cartoon quality, and the artists should seriously consider getting into animation. The look, the characterisation, the gags and (most importantly) the timing are impeccable. The game though is one club-footed step beyond the wretched Dragon's Lair, in that you have full control over your 'divil' but end up playing (dishonestly hard) 3D Maze, Simon and Frogger. MORTAL KOMBAT 2

Virgin £30

AP46 63% JN
Glitzy, vacuous conversion that relies on artificially complicated joystick moves. Fast-moving and exciting to watch, but deathly dull to play. Fights are over so quickly, and you're as likely to win bashing the fire button as juddering through the unnatural 'special move' sequences, that you're biased about losing. Whither affinity with a particular character?

Wherefore just-another-go grudge matches? Not here, friend. It's got the best 'feel' of any Amiga bashum game and there's fun to be had from its maximum hurtage, but the illogical controls mean it's less a case of discovering secrets than waiting for us to tell you the moves. And you can fox your one-player mode opponents with a single attack. Constrained by the get-it-over-with-quick coin-op, MK2's just a novelty alternative to the mighty Shadow Fighter. Intrusive disk swapping and sparser sound on the A500, but the A1200 version's entirely accurate to the arcade machine. ★★

Super Troll Island on the SNES, but on the Amiga and with Mr Blobby. Sloppy design and stupid faults (like leaping through the ceiling to land on the platform above when you merely wanted to hop over a monster) don't help; neither does the ease with which you can coast through the game. Frankly, it's Pierre and the other characters who really make the game (there's nothing here you've not seen before) but they do it with such panache that you can't help but enjoy yourself. OVERLORD

Multitudinously viewpoint flight sim of WW2 Vichy-trouncing antics with a splendid regard for the player. You can speed up time in long flights, skip take-off and landing, and tell the computer to follow the target plane visually during an attack so you don't lose him when he moves past your line-of-sight. Overwhelmingly orange RPG, a

PINBALL ILLUSIONS (AGA)

AP43 89% JD
It's a disappointment, this. The presentation's been beefed up (including more detailed 'LED board' animations) and there's a multiball option (complete with a hi-res mode to show near all the table at once) but it really is just more of the same. Less of more of the same, as well: there were going to be four tables, but they chucked one away for not being good enough. So your £30 nets you exactly three tables. All good stuff, natch, but no vast improvement over Pinball Fantasies.

POWERDRIVE

Empty tracks, trying to reproduce realistic car handling with a joystick, computer drivers that never crash and the financial burden of having to succeed just to repair the car you've smashed up speeding realistically around an empty track in order to succeed, are but some of the problems found in this rally sim. A challenge tangibly vanquishable after a few hours of practice is but one of its attractions. Actually, that's it. And you'll get fed up before you master the game, anyway.

PREMIER MANAGER 3

Zenith of stats-based footy manny games (probably) but one that suffers ironically from the depth of its cleverness. A sort of remix of the previous games in the series with all the clumsy bits ironed out, PM3's sole gimmick is its SWOS-like adjustable player positions. But unlike SWOS you have to spend ages rejigging your team after every loss, because you're not given enough information about the opposition. It's exceptionally difficult and demands unbroken concentration, but rewards with thankfully solid fun.

Current thinking in junk mail circles eschews the blanket approach, concentrating instead on finding out from various databases who you are, what you're like and what you like, and then 'targeting' their rubbish at you directly. Reunion's a bit like that (except it's not rubbish) – it's a Dune-ish buildy things strategy game with no exciting bits at all and billions of stats which requires 50 hours to complete (if you know what you're doing), an A1200 and a hard drive. So get it, Bill Rebus of Toxteth – you'll love it.

A mere three months after we reported it couldn't be done, it's been done. Those rascally software publishers, eh? Graphically simpler than, but otherwise exactly like, the A1200 version. And you don't need a hard disk to run it, although a couple of external drives are recommended.

RISE OF THE ROBOTS
Time Warner £40
(£43 A1200, £35 CD32)

AP45 5% JD
Words cannot fully convey the extent to which Rise of the Robots is the poorest full-price release ever in the history of all things, although imagining it as an insuperably retarded beat-'em-up that Player One can complete at any moment by holding down diagonally up and right and the fire button captures its essential risibility. The nearest the software industry has yet come to robbing an elderly deaf woman in a wheelchair whose son has just died in a car accident returning from the funeral of his father and sister killed when their ancestral home burned to the ground and then severely beating her. With the diseased family pet. ★

ROADKILL CD32
Acid/Vision £30

AP45 84% JD
Rocky Roll Racing on the SNES, but on the Amiga and viewed from overhead. It's an ultraviolent Super Sprint, using the old futuristic game show play to create a fantastically exciting smoking wreckage experience. "Get the jackpot," booms the announcer as you fire missiles at hapless opponents. "Get the super-jackpot," he roars as more cars spin away to their doom. The piddly damage indicators and surprisingly low number of courses (12, explicit numeric fans) annoy; the lack of a two-player game hurts. Let's hope the forthcoming A1200 version corrects things with a serial link option, eh?

ROBINSON'S REQUIEM

RUFF 'N' TUMBLE

Platform game with guns that's appallingly difficult, but rigidly fair with it. Lovely reversals (your small cute child packs a machine-pistol; the denizens of the typical platform levels – woodlands, underwater caverns and the like – are armoured and fire barbed harpoons), excitingly cataclysmic power-ups, very (but workably) tricky layouts and angrily playable. 'Challenging' is probably the word we're looking for.

SHADOW FIGHTER

AP46 91% CW
A textbook example of how to do a game properly, except nobody'll take any notice. Three Italian beat-'em-up fans looted the best bits from any number of tedious biffing games, applied sinister and special processes to them and came up with the best beat-'em-up ever in the history of all things. It's got heaps of character in the wildly diverse and carefully mismatched fighters, a beautifully simple 'special move' control method (you just swirl the D-pad in various directions and press fire) and options a-go-go. There's even a practice mode where you fight seemingly innocuous master of terror Puppazz the Puppet. Truly the Gravity Force 2 of beat-'em-ups. The A1200-specific version's on the way, but even this A500 version looks lovely. Lots of disk swapping though.

Bit of a tricky one, this. It's Bubble Bobble, but with vacuum cleaners that fatally squirt the monsters against walls. But, er, it's not very good. And we can't really put our collective finger on the reason why. Structurally, it's identical to the much-loved dinosaur/soapy envelope original (120 levels, mini-bosses, tricky bonuses, secret rooms) and many of the screen layouts are unsportingly similar, but it's not there. Um. Maybe it's the lack of continues (or any kind of restart points) or the fact it's all so numbingly easy. But probably not. It's okay. Ish. Basically. (Or maybe, dare we say it?, Bubble Bobble wasn't actually that wonderful all along.)

SUPER STARDUST A1200

AP42 89% JN
Stardust, fairly obviously, but on the A1200, equally obviously, which means better graphics, better sound, faster tunnels, bigger asteroids, underwater Thrust sub-games and keyboard control. Fabulously lovely in every respect, except (especially bizarrely considering the embolismingly hard A500 version) it's far, far too easy – we suspect Team 17 bullied the programmers into toning it down. Why? Why? A great game, but not quite a great game, if you see what we mean.

AP43 75%/85% CW
It's Laser Squad again. Except with perfectly-isometric 3D graphics. Oddly inconsistent (there's an involving stats bit and tedious air combat sequence in addition to the main clomping around an invaded town shooting things section) but still as fun as it ever was. Horribly sluggish when the aliens move, though, and you really have to play it from hard drive. (Hence the two marks – the lower's using floppy.)

★★★★★

ULTIMATE BODY BLOWS

AP39 86% SC
Third time lucky (or fourth, we've lost count of how many versions Team 17 have done) for everyone's favourite (and scandalously shameless) SF2 clone. It's got the lot: sensible use of the extra buttons, 21 individual characters (as opposed to the same character 21 times) and a fast mode that's scorchingly nippy. You'll fairly obviously need two joypads though.

★★★★

ULTIMATE PINBALL QUEST

Inframates £30

AP39 61% JD
No it isn't. ★

UNIVERSE

Core £35

AP41 21% JN
A point-and-click game so poor you'll want to volunteer for the Army rather than play it. ★

VALHALLA

Vulcan £30

AP39 19% CW
Not, regrettably, the redundantly drawn-out Specy adventure (which, apparently, only one person ever bothered to finish) but an overhead-view maze game where you walk around and get killed by unspottable traps. A lot. ★

VOYAGES OF DISCOVERY

Kompak £30

AP44 52% RP

Takey-turny naval-based wargame scuppered by no short-term goals and no 'feel' of competitive play, even though it supports up to four 'captains'.

WEMBLEY INTERNATIONAL SOCCER

Audiogenic £26 CD32/A1200

AP39 85% SM
Footy game of the Let's Not Actually Try Hopelessly Optimistically to Trounce Sensi school that's all the better for it. Some splendid ideas (overhead or isometric views, an optional window showing the player to whom you're going to pass, custom playing styles) pep it up no end, but it's all let down by the sticky speed and uncomfortably small pitch. Let's hope there's a Version 2, eh? Best played with a CD32 joystick, which you can do on the A1200 version as well.

★★★★★

WEMBLEY RUGBY LEAGUE

Audiogenic £20

AP38 62% SC
A manly and noble sport makes its debut on the Amiga. Unfortunately this is probably not quite as much fun as Five Nations Rugby (AP14, 86%) which uses the same game engine. Something's missing in the translation.

WILD CUP SOCCER

Millennium £26

AP40 14% CW
How to kill a good idea about football with a strapping dose of violence. Step one: Present the game in incredibly acute isometric 3D so it's stupendously difficult to see what's going on and inconceivably hard to make accurate passes. Step two: Implement the football mechanics in a fantastically terrible manner, so that you have to painstakingly beat up and kill all the opposing players, if you don't want them to just zip in and nick the ball leaving you helpless or dead. Step three: Compensate for this fault by allowing the player to run directly across the screen and score. Step four: Save time by allowing the player to complete the entire game just by holding down the fire button. Step five: Refuse to scrap the game and release it. For £26. It's true.

WORLD CUP CRICKET MASTERS

ESP £25

AP39 14% SM
Cricket. Done very badly indeed. Your men are drawn from the Lowry school of figurative work and are consequently almost impossible to see, the animation is appalling, the gameplay is ruined by intrusive point and click menus and it costs far too much money for what it is. If you want to play cricket on your Amiga, do yourself a favour and go out and get Graham Gooch's World Class Cricket which is a much more highly polished, civilised and playable affair. It's good to see independent companies having a go, but that's honestly just about the only good thing you can say for this awful game.

WORLD OF SOCCER

Challenge £20

AP40 5% SM
It's a football management game. Written in BASIC. By programmers who can't spell. Or write football management games with the least modicum of imagination. So surprisingly we don't like it. Very much. At all. You'd be better advised to stick your head in a vat of sulphuric acid than to contemplate buying and playing this so-called, self-styled 'game'.

★★

WORLD CUP USA '94

AP41 20% SM
Terribly awful overhead-view footy game in the rash of footie games this year with every fault imaginable ranging from eleven minute loading times, through hopelessly fiddly tackling, to 100% successful passes that reduce the game to kicking the ball from one end of the pitch to the other. Quite possibly the most shameful full price release this year.

ZEZWOLF

AP44 90% JD
Terrific helicopter arcade game that looks like Zarch (3D patchwork polygons) and plays like a terrific helicopter arcade game. 32 excitingly difficult missions, fantastic 'choka-choka' flying effects, glorious explosions, escort missions, rescue missions, picking up friendly tanks to carry them Thrust-like across the map and drop them on people missions, machine guns, rockets, air-to-air missiles, accidentally shooting down your allies, bullets hitting the water, one disk. It's awkwardly slow on an A500, but completely splendid on an A1200 machine.

It was a day Lunk would never forget...

Meanwhile...

THE SPIDER'S POISON IS RUNNING IN MY VEINS... NOW IT'S WAITING FOR ME TO DIE!

... as he fell screaming into the whirling razor knives of...

Jack picked up some beans, and...

THE FLESHDOZER!

Outside, it was...

THIS AIN'T PERSONAL, NEITHER!

'Unlucky Daydreamer' O'Mackenzie didn't stand a chance.

NO! IT'S REAL... SUCKING THE BLOOD OUT OF ME!

CARNAGE!

...ATTENTION ALL POLICE UNITS! THIS IS AN EMERGENCY! THE THING MUST BE DESTROYED! REPEAT - DESTROYED!

Ah well, time to scream and faint dead away.

EEEEEEK!

It was Chad's last day on the job before returning to his wife and newborn baby. He hoped nothing would happen, like being eaten by a giant crocodile that crept up behind him, or anything.

He was to be...

Dang!

Double dang!

Joe saw it all...

Chad! Dang!

UFO

ENEMY UNKNOWN

COMMAND EARTH'S FORCES AGAINST THE ALIEN TERROR

"This is the best game I've ever seen" 97%

COMPUTER GAME REVIEW

1999. You are in control of XCom; charged by the world's leaders to strike at the alien menace that's terrorising the Earth.

At first, you'll scan, track and shoot down the slower UFOs, but that will just be the beginning. Whenever a UFO crashes, or lands, you must be there; leading a squad of armed soldiers from building to building, from street to street, using all your tactical skills to capture or destroy the aliens.

If you succeed in your first missions, your scientists and engineers will copy the alien technology to create more powerful weapons and craft for your forces to use. Gradually, you'll build up a terrifying picture of this Unknown Enemy, and their real aims and desires, then you'll have to work out a strategy to stop them.

One thing is certain - it won't be easy!
